This High Victorian Gothic house is simple in shape and rather tall in its proportions. Built of brick, it is roofed with shingle and decorated with wood details. The plan is L-shaped and from the street one sees at the right a two story section which has a steeply pitched roof topped by a row wooden decoration. The gable end is covered by an ample semi-circular bargeboard which is elaborately carved and has hammer beam pendants. bargeboard almost hides from view a small round window high in the eaves. On the first floor of this wing is a set of three tall segmental-arched windows in a bay set out from the main wall of the wing. At the sides of the bay are two more windows. The bay is covered with a shingle roof supported by triangular wooden brackets. On the second floor is a pair of round-arched windows topped by stone hood molds. On the right side of the McMillan house two pairs of very tall doubled, round-arched windows appear on the first floor and on the second floor there are two round arched windows appear on the first floor and on the second floor there are two round arched windows covered by gables and wooden bargeboards which match the one at the front of the house. To the left of this main wing is the other wing of the house which turns its long side to the street. On the ground floor is a wooden porch. An open wooden screen separates the porch into two bays of wide, straight arches with rounded corners. There is a flat wooden porch rail. A set of double windows looks out onto the porch and to their right, where one wing joins the other is the entrance to the house, a set of double doors. On the second floor, above the porch and directly above the doors is a large rectangular glass window. The line of the roof on this wing is broken by a wide gable to allow two tall round arched windows to appear. These also have elaborately carved wooden bargeboards and hammer beam pendants. The decoration of all the bargeboards features scrollsaw and chisel-and-gouge ornamentation, all of which is rather flat. Flowery triangular shapes appear within applied wooden circles as well as open scrolls and volutes. The gingerbread-like ornamentation of these bargeboards, and the slender, open ornamentation of the wooden porch supports against the brick and shingle of the McMillan house give it special charm.
