DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Washington Township Center High School is located in a rural area of Johnson County. The environment is gently-rolling, cultivated land, with an occasional farmstead. The school is situated at the crossing of two gravel county roads; across the road to the west, within a windbreak of pines, is a building once used as the local elementary school

The former high school building, erected in 1926, is a boxy frame structure, 51' x 36', one story, on a high, poured concrete foundation. It has a high, hipped roof with broad eaves. Sash windows are set in plain surrounds, beneath transom panels of 3 vertical lights. The windows are grouped in three banks of three on the north side, and are individually-placed on the other facades.

The entrance is set within a slightly protruding, hipped-roof pavilion. The door is framed by sidelights and has a multi-light transom with vertical panes. Between the entrance and the bank of three small sash windows set close beneath the eaves is a faded wooden sign with the name of the school and date of construction.

The basement of the school is rather unfinished, but is partitioned into two large rooms. These once housed classes in home economics, physics, chemistry and woodworking. Evidence of the latter is a wooden panel with silhouettes where tools were to be properly hung. The main floor contains classrooms on the northwest, southwest and southeast corners. The bulk of the floor space is taken up by a large study hall/auditorium, 36' long and 24' wide. A portable stage once used here is now gone, but the curtain, on which is painted a mountain scene and advertisements from local businesses of the period, remains.

Although the school closed in 1945, the building has seen continuous use as a community center for rural area residents. It is now undergoing rehabilitation by the local chapter of Optimists International.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

1926

Washington Township Center High School represents an unusual facet in the history of rural public education in lowa. Erected and maintained solely through donations and tuition paid by township residents, it was in that sense a throwback to the early days of public education in the state. On the other hand, the school represented the growing awareness among rural people of the importance of schooling beyond the traditional eighth-grade level. The school was a response to a combination of needs and concerns involving educational opportunity for farm children, inadequate roads and methods of transportation, and the rural inhabitant's common misgivings about the life and atmosphere of "the city".

The earliest public high schools in lowa were generally located in towns and cities, with the majority of their students drawn from these communities. Participation of students from rural, farming areas was often limited, due to the distance they were required to travel over bad roads, and/or to a feeling among rural people that education beyond the eighth grade was an unnecessary luxury for young men and women destined to follow their parents' footsteps as farmers and farm wives and mothers. The innate suspicion of the country man for the city dweller also biased some rural parents against sending their children alone to school in town.

The inhabitants of Washington Township in the 1920's were generally in agreement with their farming counterparts in other areas of lowa on the problems of distance and urban life, particularly with respect to the education of their children. However, they recog nized the need for education beyond the traditional elementary-school level, as life in the 20th century became more complex and educational standards rose. Their response was the establishment of Washington Township Center High School, which opened in 1926. In establishing the school, these people reverted to a tradition common in 19th century lowa, in which "public" schools, generally of the one-room sort, were built, funded, and supervised by the local inhabitants, deriving from subscriptions, contributions and a nominal tuition feel the means to maintain the building and pay the teachers. Appropriately, the new high school was located across the road from the township's elementary school, in the extreme southwest corner of Section 15, which was almost the exact center of the township. The high school served the community for 19 years, offering a varied curriculum which included "basics" such as English, mathematics, and history, as well as home economics; woodworking and the sciences. The building also was a community center, where an annual "fall festival" combined "open house" at school with a local fair featuring baked and canned goods, piecework, and agricultural products. This use of the building as a community center continued after the school closed in 1945: it was used for several years thereafter as a polling place, and in 1952 as a meeting house for the local 4-H chapter. About 1960, a corporation was formed of township residents to maintain the building as a place for public functions. On maps today, the crossroads
