Describe present and historic physical appearance:

Summary

Constructed in two phases in 1892 and 1896, the Grubb Springs School is a single-story, rectangular-plan building built of native sandstone and covered with a composition-shingled gable roof. Principal alterations include the addition of vinyl siding to the gable ends, the construction of a small porch roof, and a suspended acoustical tile ceiling in the interior. A historic outhouse and a modern outhouse associated with the school are included within the boundaries of this nomination.

Elaboration

Located at the northeast corner of the intersection of Arkansas Highways 43 and 397, the Grubb Springs School is a single-story, rectangular-plan building measuring twenty-eight feet by forty-four feet that was constructed in two phases in 1892 and 1896. The foundation and walls are constructed of rough-faced, rectangular sandstone blocks laid in regular courses. A composition-shingled end gable roof covers the structure, and the two gable ends are currently covered with vinyl siding that approximates the width of the historic wood weatherboard. A simple gabled belfry, which is also clad with vinyl siding, is located at the end of the roof on the front elevation, and an interior brick chimney protrudes above the ridgeline in the center of the school.

The front, or southern, elevation is defined by two single-leaf entrances. Both doors have been replaced with modern, six-panelled, steel counterparts, and the corresponding transoms have been covered with plywood. The eastern door is no longer used as an entrance, and the western door is now sheltered by a small gable roof supported by triangular brackets.

Both side elevations are fenestrated by three original two-over-two, double-hung wood windows. The window openings are symmetrically placed and feature true segmental arches and substantial sandstone lintels. The rear, or northern, elevation is not fenestrated.

Original interior elements of school include the cement-plastered stone walls, pine flooring, the original bell, and a raised stage area with chalkboard at the northern end. A suspended acoustical-tile ceiling was installed in the late 1950's or early 1960's after the Grubb Springs Extension Homemakers Club acquired the building. Three chamfered wood posts help support the original-height ceiling, which consists of pressed board trimmed with battens. This ceiling is known to be historic but may not be the original. The dropped ceiling also obscures the triangular braces of the three support posts. Fortunately, the Extension Homemakers Club is planning to remove the nonhistoric ceiling.

There are two outhouses associated with the school. Although no longer in use and a near ruin, the historic wood outhouse northwest of the northwest corner of the school is considered contributing to the nomination. A modern, state-approved concrete block outhouse has been placed due east of the school. Both structures are one-holers.

Summary

The Grubb Springs School is being nominated under Criterion C with local significance as an excellent example of a late-nineteenth century, stone-constructed, one-room school building.

Elaboration

Very little is known about the history of the Grubb Springs community. It was named for an early settler named Grubb, who had a spring on his property (just north of the nominated boundaries). In 1892, the Methodist Church purchased three acres of land from E. A. Grubb and initiated construction of the nominated property for use as a church. The work, however, was not completed, and in 1896 the land and partially constructed building was sold to the Grubb Springs School District. The building was subsequently completed and used for forty-eight years as the Grubb Springs School with classes held for grades one through eight.

After the Grubb Springs School consolidated in 1954 and the building abandoned, the school board allowed the community to use the structure for meetings and other activities. Five years later, the Grubb Springs School was purchased by the current owners, the Grubb Spring Extension Homemakers Club. This organization continues to use the building as a community center. Other clubs and organizations also use the former school for a meeting place. An annual crafts fair was initiated a few years ago, and weddings have been held here on occasion.

Historically, the school was also used for community activities, as were most all rural schools. Church services in the school were not a regular occurrence although in 1911 the Grubb Springs Baptist Church was organized in the building. This congregation met in the school for a short time until their own church could be completed.

The Grubb Springs School is being nominated under Criterion C with local significance as an excellent example of a Plain Traditional-styled, gable-roof, one-room school building. This design was standard issue for rural school construction in Arkansas during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The Grubb Springs School is particularly distinguished by the quality of the coursed sandstone exterior walls, which are similar to other Ozark vernacular structures, the original fenestration, and the intact belfry. As such, the Grubb Springs School is the best known representative of this vernacular school design in the Harrison vicinity of Boone County.
