DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Built in 1844, it appeared as a plain, rectangular two story building with medium gable roof six bays deep and three bays wide, over slightly raised brick supports.

Interior (with a gallery "for use by colored members") was unornamented.

Foresight used in further additions and interior remodeling have maintained the distinct atmosphere of the church.

A front portion was added to the south side of the original building (the walls of which were redone in clapboard to match the addition). A portico supported by Doric columns and low steeple help to present a graceful, modest house of worship.

Interior has been kept basically the same - gallery with balustrade supported by Doric columns, pulpit, pews - except for the enclosure of portions of the gallery for classrooms.

Extensive adjacent cemetery - one section with Revolutionary War era markers; many Confederate graves.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SEE INSTRUCTIONS

Padgett's Creek Baptist Church is important for detailed manual craftsmanship in primary construction and for appropriate additions and alterations which have maintained its architectural integrity.

It is significant as an up-country meeting place for discussion of vital civil matters during the Civil War.

Organized November 22, 1784, as Church of Christ on the Tyger River. Present name was adopted in 1803.

First Sunday School held January 2, 1831; became member of Baptist State Convention 1841; Missionary Society organized 1878.

In 1844 construction of a new meeting house began about one mile above the original and finally completed by April 15, 1848.

On August 29, 1851, a Secession Meeting (possibly the first) was held there. Speakers were Senator William H. Gist (later governor of South Carolina) and Congressman Daniel Wallace who advocated "secession rather than submission".

Its history is singular, for the church provided a special place for Negro members, offering comfort and convenience to all its members. There were Negro members as late as 1872 and their graves may be seen in the cemetery.
