Narrative Description

The Bank of Loretto is a one story, Classic Revival brick with stone veneer commercial building with a rectangular footprint and flat composition roof obscured by a parapet. It features such Classical Revival features as a symmetrical fenestration pattern, pedimented main entry and double-hung 3/3 wood windows with fanlights that reference the appearance of a Georgian window. The building also has a non-contributing c. 1950 brick rear addition that is well differentiated from the main block by a non-contributing c. 1970 covered seating area. The bank is located on a small lot at the corner of Broad and South Main Street in the small, rural community of Loretto. It is surrounded by one-story commercial buildings. The bank retains its integrity.

Setting and Site Features

The Bank of Loretto is located on a small lot at the corner of Broad and Main Street in the small, rural community of Loretto (2010 census population of 1,714). The bank fills the majority of its lot. It is set in a small commercial area, just west of the railroad tracks, as it was historically. The commercial area includes historic and modern one- and two-story commercial buildings and a few gravel parking lots. The lot immediately to west of the bank is vacant but likely historically featured a commercial building.

Exterior

The facade and east elevation are covered by a stone veneer. The façade has three bays with "The Bank of Loretto" written in the parapet's frieze. The main entry is a single wood door, centered on the façade, with a triangular pediment and fanlight above. Two 3/3 double hung wooden windows with fanlights and arched lintels flank the front door. Pilasters demarcate the edges of the facade, extending from the concrete foundation to the top of the parapet.

The East Elevation has seven bays. The central single wood door is topped by a heavy cornice and fanlight. The 3/3 double hung wooden windows with fanlights and architraves flank the door. Pilasters demarcate the edges of the elevation. There is a wooden non-historic wheel chair ramp that extends from the side door north alongside the building. The ramp has wooden railings.

A non-contributing c. 1970 covered seating area addition with double entry batten door is attached to the bank's rear, southern elevation. It features a shed metal roof. To the south of the 1970s addition is a non-contributing c. 1950 one-story painted brick restroom building. The east elevation has three bays. It has a gable asphalt shingle roof with exposed rafters. A single entry wood door is flanked by board and batten shutters.

The rear, south elevation of the bank building is red brick. The first level of the historic block is obscured by the 1970s addition. The second level has one 2/2 double-hung wooden window with a brick solidier sill. The rear elevation is the only elevation to lack a parapet wall on the roof. The south elevation of the 1950s restroom addition features only a painted commercial mural. Visible is a wood frame hallway addition on the west side of the restroom building, which is not visible from the street. The hallway addition has a wood batten door.

The West Elevation of the bank building is brick covered with painted plaster and capped metal cornice. There are no openings except for a vent halfway down the elevation. The covered 1970s seating area extends to the south where it meets the wood-frame hallway addition on the restroom.

Interior

The interior of the main block consists of one room for dining that was formerly used for banking. The wrap around bar separates the kitchen from the dining area which was formerly the tellers stations. Floors are original penny tile in the original public lobby area and wooden in the original office/teller area. The ceiling contains the original skylights. The West Wall has exposed brick but all other walls are plaster with original marble wainscoting. Originally all walls were plastered with marble wainscoting (see Figure 1). The former vault now serves as a food storage and prep room. The former meeting room is now a bar room that is located at the southeast corner featuring the original fireplace; the deposit counter serves as the bar. The attic space was opened above the meeting room to create a gift shop and office space. The staircase was added at the southeast corner for access.

The 1970s seating area is a concrete pad with a sloped roof. The east and west walls have half-walls to allow it to be open to the outside. During cold months, temporary plastic is installed in the openings to keep in heat. The 1950s and hallways additions are similarly unfinished, conveying their utilitarian use.

Integrity

The Bank of Loretto has strong integrity to convey its architectural significance. The bank is at its original location. It is located in a commercial area in the small, rural town of Loretto, as it was historically, thereby having strong integrity of setting. The bank retains significant features including stone veneer, symmetrical fenestration patterns, pediments, and windows that mimic the appearance of a Georgian window. On the interior, the bank retains such original features as some of the original marble wainscoting, flooring, skylights, and spatial arrangement. It overall retains good integrity of materials, design, and workmanship, particularly considering it is the only example of the Classical Revival style in its local context. The bank's intact features allow it to have a strong integrity of feeling and association.

Changes to the bank building are primarily limited to minor changes in the interior (such as loss of plaster from the west wall) and to rear additions. These rear additions do not significantly detract from the integrity of the building because they do not affect or obscure architecturally significant features and they are well-differentiated from the original historic building, thereby allowing the historic building to convey its original design and massing. The wheel chair ramp on the eastern elevation is a minor detraction from the bank's appearance. It has not harmed the bank's historic fabric and could easily be removed.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph

The Bank of Loretto is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C as a good local example of a vernacular Classical Revival style building. This is the only Classical Revival style commercial building in Loretto. Its significant features include its stone veneer, symmetrical fenestration pattern, pediments, and windows that mimic the style of Georgian windows. The property's period of significance is limited to 1924, the date of its construction.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Loretto, first known as Glen Rock, began as a stagecoach station and a tavern in the early 1800s. In the late 19th century, Loretto experienced growth and economic prosperity due to four factors. These factors were migration of German Catholics; the arrival of the Nashville and Florence railroad which later merged into the L&N railroad; cotton processing; and the lumber industry. Loretto experienced an influx of German Catholics in the 1870s raising not only the population but the local economy as the immigrants opened new businesses in downtown Loretto.¹

Coinciding with the influx of German Catholics, the newly laid Nashville and Florence Railroad (also known as the Sheffield line) brought supplies and materials into Loretto. By 1886 the line was taken over by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. Four passenger trains serviced Loretto daily: two traveled to Columbia and Nashville and two to Florence, Alabama. The railroad brought more people in and around downtown Loretto which increased the demand for goods and services to include retail shops, eateries as well as one hotel and one bank in downtown.²

Agriculture impacted the economy in Loretto, specifically in cotton. Alabama farmers seeking fertile land moved to Loretto and surrounding areas. This brought in new wealth to Loretto and downtown merchants prospered. Loretto possessed three operational cotton gins, all within the downtown due to the close proximity to the railroad. In addition, the discovery of phosphate in nearby Maury County propelled the timber industry to dominance in Lawrence County due to the use of timber as a heat source in phosphate furnaces.³

A local bank is an essential part of economic viability for a town, and Loretto was no exception. The first building for the Bank of Loretto was located on lot 5 in the town of Loretto and was chartered 1910. The Bank was owned by John Hollander. The first building burned in 1924.⁴ Several men assisted in the establishment of the new Bank: Joseph P. Augustin, B.P. Lumpkins, William Sandschulte, L.G. Waldrop, Francis Hollander, J.H. Lester, E. Augustin, L.G. Waldrop, John Kessler, and A.L. Phillips.⁵ On lot 8, in 1924, the nominated property was constructed as the second Bank of Loretto by the Augustin Lumber Company.⁶

The Bank of Loretto was designed by C.K. Colley & Company located in Nashville (see Figure 2).⁷ Colley was prolific architect in Tennessee. Among his extant works is the Colonial Revival-style Perry County Courthouse (NR Listed 3/30/1995) in Linden, TN; the Tudor Revival Fire Hall for Engine Company No. 18 in Nashville (NR Listed 6/24/2016); the Colonial Revival Wilkinson House in Joelton near Nashville (NR Listed 11/29/2006); and buildings at Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro and Austin Peay State University in Clarksville.⁸

The second building for the Bank of Loretto served the public from 1925 until 1967 when a new bank building was constructed to accommodate the expansion of the bank. While in operation the Bank of Loretto helped spur economic development by assisting with financing hundreds of homes and providing capital for starting or expanding business and agriculture production (see Figures 3-5 for ephemera from the bank during its operation).⁹ The bank was eventually bought out by First Farmers and Merchants Bank located in Columbia in 1985.¹⁰

The Knights of Columbus purchased the second bank building in 1969 and utilized it for their meeting hall and event center. Before the bank closed some marble was removed from the interior walls and sold. Local residents purchased some of the sections of marble and are using them in homes in and around Loretto. The property now functions as a restaurant.

Architectural Significance and Context

The architecture of the Bank of Loretto represents the local history of a small agricultural rural community. Rural banks such as the Bank of Loretto were opened primarily in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century when cultivation and farming was at peak. The period between 1900 and 1930 has been described as the "Golden Age of Agriculture" in this country, and this prosperity was often reflected in the growth and development of banks in rural farming communities.

The Bank of Loretto is significant as an example of the Classical Revival architectural style. Diane Maddex, editor of Built in the U.S.A: American Buildings from Airports to Zoos stated, "Although banks occasionally sought new architectural expression, the traditional visual virtues of strength and security were retained."¹¹ Maddex continued, "Although banks early adopted the canons of classical architecture as appropriate forms to house their functions, the less tangible attributes of strength, security, and stability characterize them as distinguishable building types."¹² The Classical Revival style embodies these characteristics.

The Bank of Loretto retains several features that convey the Classical Revival style. Its usage of a stone veneer and symmetrical fenestration pattern reflects traditional, high-style aesthetics. The bank's windows utilize a double-hung sash window and fanlight above which reference the style of a Georgian window, an important characteristic of traditional early American architectural styles. The bank's pediments and pilasters are also features of the Classical Revival style.

Within the local context of Loretto, the Bank of Loretto is the only Classical Revival commercial building. Loretto has few historic commercial buildings. Those that remain are one- and two-part commercial blocks with first level storefronts, parapet walls, and visually prominent non-historic front porches. Some have been covered by artificial stone cladding. None of these buildings have any features conveying a particular decorative architectural style, which allows the Bank of Loretto to stand out in the local context as a unique good example of the Classical Revival style.
