National Register of Historic Places
Continuation SheetSection number 7 Page 1Description

During the Railroad Era (1870-1914) in White County a variety of vernacular houses were constructed. They were also built out of a variety of materials. Intact surviving examples from this period, however, are somewhat limited. The Thomas Hunt House is a good example of the evolution of a vernacular house type. It was originally a one-story, frame, double-pen house. Since it was constructed, c. 1885, it has several historic alterations. It currently has composition shingled gabled roofs, walls that are clad with weatherboard, and the entire structure rests on a stone pier foundation. It is currently occupied and in good condition.

Located on the east side of State Road 157 approximately four hundred feet south of County Road 704, this building is one and one-half miles north of the crossroads community of Plainview. The main, or west, elevation of the house is dominated by an historic front ell addition and wrap-around porch. This chamfered ell protrudes from the location of the northernmost of the original two front doors. The gable end of the ell is decorated with imbricated shingles. This decoration is carried on to the pediments that rise from the wrap-around porch. The porch is supported by turned posts that are decorated with wood ornament.

Single doors flank the front ell while one also enters the north elevation of the ell. A single door is also located on the southern end of the west elevation. Single one-over-one double-hung sash windows are centrally located on both the north and south elevations of the ell and a similar one is situated between the two doors south of the ell. A paired one-over-one double-hung sash window relieves the gable end of the ell. The south elevation of the original building is relieved by a paired, centrally placed, one-over-one double-hung sash window.

A small metal flue rises from the gable peak above this window. While a rear ell addition dominates the northern edge of the east elevation of the structure, an original opening is still visible on the southern edge of this side. It consists of a single one-over-one double-hung sash window. A paired, sliding window is located where it appears a recessed porch once resided. This is located on the south elevation of the rear ell. A four-pane fixed frame window is also located on this gable end. Extending from the south elevation of this enclosed porch is a shed roofed screened in porch addition. It is entered by a single door that is located slightly east of center. The north elevation of the rear ell is relieved by a centrally placed paired one-over-one double-hung sash window while the gable end of the original building has a similar, albeit larger, single window.

Approximately fifty feet northeast of the house is a stone, gable roofed, sweet potato storage house that was constructed c. 1925. There are two additions found on this ancillary; a storage room and a two-seat privy.

Significance

When this building was constructed, c. 1885, it was one of numerous one-story, frame double-pen houses built in White County during the Railroad Era. While there are still eighty-five of these houses still left in the county, few reflect the period in which they were constructed. Even though the Thomas Hunt House has had several additions it is still a good example of the way in which houses have evolved through the years from very simple floorplans to more elaborate versions to accommodate growing families.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.
