Published specifications give us a good picture of what the "Chief's House" must have looked like in the late 1830s. The same specifications gave restorers a welcome blueprint to go by in their work. In between, of course, the double-house-with-dogtrot shrank to half its size (as the north wing was pulled down, its logs and chimney stones put to other purposes on the farm) and decayed badly from abuse and neglect.

Government plans called for the house to be 52 x 20 feet, consisting of two rooms 20 feet square at each end and the traditional open passageway, or dogtrot (12 x 20 feet), between them. Logs 15 inches "on the face," six inches thick, were specified for the walls, with the inner surface straight edged. One and one-half inch thick planks, tongue-and-grooved, were required for the flooring and room ceilings. House-length porches, 10 feet wide, were called for. Sills were to be on a 12-inch center with flooring laid "athwart the porch." Porch roofs were to extend down over the main body of the house. The roof was to be of 18-inch singles with a five-inch show. A stairway leads to the two, low-ceilinged upper rooms, connected over the dogtrot by a hallway. Massive stone chimneys guarded either end of the house.

Although the old house was pretty much a shambles when restoration work began in the 1960s, it now closely resembles the original. Inside restoration work -- and re-furnishing -- continue. One original mantel, a handsome hand-carved affair, has survived. Within a few months the "Chief's House" -- and Oklahoma's oldest -- will be open to visitors who would see how a Choctaw Nation leader lived on the frontier in the early 1800s.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Oklahoma's "oldest house" still standing is significant not only for its antiquity, but also for the fact it was built by the Federal Government in fulfillment of a solemn treat obligation (itself no mean feat in the early 19th century) and occupied for many years by a well known District Chief of the Choctaw Nation.

The 1830 Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, arranging the removal of the Choctaws from Mississippi to what is now Southeastern Oklahoma, provided $10,000 for erection of a council house and homes for each of three district chiefs. This log house near present-day Swink was that built for the Apukshenubbee District chief. Specifications for it were printed in the Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock) in 1836. Contract fulfillment date was Sept. 1, 1837.

Greenwood LeFlore, it might be pointed out, was the district chief who signed the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty. He chose not to leave Mississippi, however, and sent his cousin, Thomas LeFlore, to serve in his stead. Other chief's were elected when his term expired. But by then each had his own home and continued to live in it rather occupy the government-provided house. As result Thomas LeFlore, as one historian has noted, "lived in the house so long that he thought he owned the place."

Certainly he built up the property. In time he had a thousand acres, cared for plantation-style by Negro slaves. Even after he had moved away the place was always known as the "Thousand Acre Farm." During the Civil War it was focal point of pro-Confederate activities. After the war, however, the plantation was broken up into smaller tracts and different families lived in the old house. For a time it was occupied by a "Parson Keith," a Methodist missionary who held church services and performed weddings in the house. When the tribal land was individually allotted under terms of the Dawes Commission, this part of the old "Thousand Acre Farm" passed the Swink family (for whom the nearby community was named). In 1902 it was sold to the Blair family. The present owners bought it in 1956, have granted perpetual easement to the house itself to the Oklahoma Historical Society.

Chief's House

Though the house fell on hard times and the north half of it was torn away, part of the original structure remained to serve as enchor for the carefully restored "Chief's House" visitors now see. It stands as a handsome reminder that the federal government did not break all its solemn treaty obligations with the Indians and an impressive tribute to one of the Choctaw Nation's best known families.
