DESCRIPTION:

The Bill Peck House is a one-story classic cottage with a truncated hip roof over its cubical massing. Hip-roofed porches extend from the south, north, and west walls; the front porch has turned pillars and scroll brackets. Atop the roof, absolutely centered, is a corbelled brick chimney. Under the roof's asphalt shingles, the roofline flashing is still apparent in profile. The house is sided with narrow white shiplap. The window frames and porch brackets, painted red, make a bright contrast. The south, east, and west sides have three openings each; in the southern facade this tripartite arrangement is symmetrical: a door flanked by two windows.

SIGNIFICANCE:

A few other classic cottages exist in Challis, all unfortunately altered in texture and massing. The Bill Peck House is the only unaltered pure example of the type extant in the town. The classic cottage, with its enclosed eaves and classical symmetry and massing, is a style similar in feeling to much of Challis domestic architecture.

According to one informant, Bill Peck probably built his own home. Peck was living in Challis by 1898 and was an officer in the local tent of the Knights of the Maccabees.
