Situated at the corner of Fourth Street and Medary Avenue in the heart of the City of Brookings, the George P. Sexauer House is an excellent example of vernacular Queen Anne styling. A two-and-one-half-story frame dwelling, it rests on a fieldstone foundation. It is sided with clapboard, which was recently painted gray with rust and green accent trim. Rectangular in plan, the house is capped by a hipped roof covered with wood shingles. The main entrance faces south. Small hipped-roof dormers project from a half-story attic on the south and east sides, while a larger wall dormer rises along the west facade. A bay window projects from the center of the east facade. A round tower topped by a conical roof rises above the roof line at the southeast corner of the house. It is adorned by a wide band of fishscale shingles. The south and east facades are wrapped by an open porch with a decorative balustrade and Doric columns. A narrow brick chimney rises from near the center of the roof peak. Added shortly after initial construction at the northwest corner of the house is a two story shed-roofed annex, which accommodates a rear entry porch, a pantry, and a second-story sun porch. A modern open deck projects from the west facade.

Exterior treatments remain characteristically asymmetrical; however, fenestration is still generally balanced from story to story. The majority of windows are one-over-one double sash units. A large multiple-pane picture window with beveled glass pierces the south (front) facade. On the west side of the house, a small rectangular art glass window provides light for the interior staircase. Farther up the staircase a sash window also features art glass in its upper light.

Original interior features include maple woodwork, oak and maple floors, pocket doors and authentic light fixtures. Imported English tile decorates the fireplace. The original irregular floor plan remains essentially unchanged.

Constructed in 1908, a one-story two-stall garage (noncontributing) covered with a gable roof is located at the northwest corner of the property. It is faced with clapboard and painted to match the house. In recent times the drive-in door was widened to accommodate a modern Fiberglas overhead door.

Under Criteria B and C of the National Register Criteria, the George P. Sexauer House is significant in the areas of industry and architecture. It is associated with distinguished early Brookings resident and booster George P. Sexauer, who established an extensive grain milling concern in Brookings County. Constructed in 1900, the house is also an excellent local example of Queen Anne domestic styling. Under the South Dakota Historical Preservation Plan, the property relates to the historic context labeled: IV. Permanent Rural and Urban Pioneer Settlement, D. Urban Settlement, 2. Residential Living.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Brookings County in east-central South Dakota was created in 1862, but it remained essentially unsettled until 1869. The county was officially organized in 1871, and rapid development materialized only after the entry of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad in the late-1870s. The City of Brookings, near the center of the county and platted in 1879, is the seat of government and principal regional commercial hub. Quickly, small service towns and railroad sidings sprang up along the Northwestern tracks going in and out of Brookings. The economy of the county was and still is largely based on agriculture.

Geo. P. Sexauer (his standard identity) was born in Galena, Illinois, on May 23, 1861, and grew up in Fountain City, Wisconsin. His wife, Elisa Ulrich, was born near Fountain City on May 19, 1861. Eventually, Sexauer settled in Chatfield, Minnesota, and owned and operated a water power flour mill. Inadequate wheat supplies there prompted him to turn to the wheat fields of South Dakota and swap the Minnesota mill for the Volga Roller Flour Mill, distinguished for its "Volga Fancy Patent Flour." He opened the mill on November 13, 1893, at a time when wheat sold for 45 cents a bushel and the head miller "drew $2.50 a day and was the envy of the town" (Volga Tribune, August 22, 1929, Section 2, 12). Sexauer expanded his holdings in 1897, and purchased the newly-constructed Brookings Mill Company. Advertising in the 1899 Souvenir Edition of the Brookings Weekly Register indicates that Sexauer was proprietor at the Volga and Brookings mill, with a specialty of exchanging wheat for flour, and trading in wheat, oats, barley, and corn. He is referred to as the "elevator king of South Dakota" in the Golden Anniversary Edition of The Volga Tribune. His pioneering efforts in agricultural industry in Brookings County represent an important contribution to economic prosperity in the county. In 1989, descendants of Sexauer carry on the agricultural-industrial tradition through The Sexauer Company, with 11 elevators and four regional seed plant locations.

In addition, Sexauer was a perennial figure in commercial speculation, social affairs, and philanthropy throughout the early years of Brookings. Along with other town fathers, he invested in the construction of several commercial ventures in the city's downtown core (see "Brookings Commercial Historic District," Brookings County, listed in the National Register in 1988). He was an organizer of the local commercial club (chamber of commerce), Kiwanis Club, and other social and church-related organizations. He remains one of the outstanding citizens in the history of the city and county. Sexauer died in 1943. His wife died in 1949.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

During the late 19th Century and very early 20th Century, Queen Anne styling dominated domestic building throughout South Dakota. Influenced by the work of English architect Richard Norman Shaw, Queen Anne houses provided increased comfort and domesticity for single-family households. Prominent aesthetic features of the style include asymmetrical facades, irregular rooflines, multiplicity of siding materials especially the use of fishscale shingles, and decorative treatments to gable ends, porches, and projecting bays. The front facade is usually divided into uneven squares or planes. Fenestration is always asymmetrical, often consisting of a number of shapes and sizes of windows. Frequently, a tower is incorporated into the design. Interior spaces emphasize richness and comfort.

Sexauer let the contract for his home in April, 1900. Newspaper accounts value the cost of construction at $4,000. The architectural highlight of the home is the corner-anchored tower, covered with shingles and fish-scaling. A variety of window forms are used in asymmetrical yet balanced arrangements. Particularly noteworthy are the bay window and a large picture window, along with the tasteful use of beveled and stained art glass. In the Queen Anne tradition, the two-and-a-half story building has an irregular roof line and dormers projecting from three sides of the home. Its scale and sprawling wrap-around porch reflect typical Queen Anne massing. The use of ornamental balusters, newel posts, and colonnades provides decorative interest. With an essentially unchanged floor plan, the interior displays an abundance of original amenities including maple woodwork, maple and oak flooring, pocket doors, imported English tile on the fireplace, and brass light fixtures in the living room, dining room, and parlor. Mr. and Mrs. Sexauer lived in the house until their deaths.

The period of significance of the nominated property extends from the construction date of the house in 1900 to 1939, the established 50-year cut-off date for the National Register.
