				CEMETERY, TALLAHASSEE, LEON CO., FL

SUMMARY

The Blackwood-Harwood Plantations Cemetery is located in a rural portion of the City of Tallahassee between Fred George Road and Gearhart Road. It is a small family cemetery, occupying approximately 0.062 of an acre within a large parcel of land, and containing 13 graves, 10 of which have markers. Two of the graves are of Florida governors Robert Raymond Reid and Millard Fillmore Caldwell. Three of the stone markers are from Florida's Territorial Period and are counted as contributing objects. A non-historic metal fence surrounds the cemetery.

SETTING

The cemetery is located on a rise of wooded land and is surrounded by a modern black metal fence. The property is accessed by a dirt road that runs ½ mile north to a gate on Fred George Road. Railroad tracks run north/south directly east of the gated access, and are approximately 100 yards east of the cemetery. Mature oak and pine trees cover the property, and directly to the west the terrain slopes downward to a periodically marshy area. There is no development visible from the cemetery.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Surrounded by a non-historic metal fence is approximately 2700 square feet devoted to the Blackwood-Harwood Plantations Cemetery (Photo #1). Thirteen graves are evident, but only 10 have memorial stones. The oldest burial dates from 1830, and is marked with an inscribed horizontal slab on the ground (Photo #2). Two vertical memorial stones with foot stones mark other graves from the same family (Photo #3). Both of these stones contain ornate calligraphic-like carving (Photo #4). A small granite marker to the southwest was placed in 1965 at the grave of Florida's Territorial Governor, Robert Raymond Reid (Photo #5). Historic bricks outline and cover the governor's grave. Six non-historic horizontal slabs on the ground mark the graves of Florida Governor Millard Fillmore Caldwell and his family (Photos #6&7). These six memorials are inscribed granite. The three burials without memorials are in the northwest corner, and are outlined with bricks. Bricks of similar appearance are found in a location

BLACKWOOD-HARWOOD PLANTATIONS CEMETERY INSCRIPTIONS

During Florida's Territorial Period the land on which the cemetery is located was known as Blackwood Plantation, named after the Black family that had moved to Florida from South Carolina in 1828. The earliest grave is that of Charles Black. Family members and relations are aligned along the west fence of the cemetery.

In 1941, Millard Fillmore Caldwell bought a farm which included what had been Blackwood Plantation. Caldwell called his property Harwood Plantation after his wife Mary's maiden name. Six Caldwell family graves are within the northeast quadrant of the cemetery, aligned in two rows of three. Caldwell's father, mother, sister, and 12 year old son's graves were moved from Milton, in Santa Rosa County, to Caldwell's property in the 1970s. Governor Caldwell and his wife were buried there in the 1980s. All Caldwell graves are non-historic. The numbered inscriptions are keyed to the accompanying site plan.

SUMMARY

The Blackwood-Harwood Plantation Cemetery is nominated to the National Register for significance on the state level under Criterion A in the area of Early Settlement for Blackwood being one of the region's earliest plantations; Criterion C in the area of Art for examples of significant regional stone carvers and rare Territorial Period memorials; and under Criterion B in the area of Politics and Government for its association with Florida Governor Robert Raymond Reid. The cemetery also includes the grave of Governor Millard F. Caldwell, who died in 1984.

HISTORIC CONTEXT

Territorial Florida

Spain deeded Florida to the United States in 1821. At that time most of the white, non-Indian population was clustered around St. Augustine and Pensacola. The two cities hosted the government for the Territory of Florida, alternating the first two years. Difficulty in travel led to the establishment of Tallahassee in Middle Florida, midway between St. Augustine and Pensacola, as the meeting place for the Territorial Legislative Council. Leon County was created in 1824, and Tallahassee was incorporated in 1825. Survey work in Leon County began in 1825, and when completed, the land became available for auction. The land was sold quickly in large portions to newly established plantation owners and land speculators.

Beginning in 1838, delegates to a Constitutional Convention began meeting in St. Joseph, a port town southwest of Tallahassee, to draft a constitution which would begin the process of obtaining statehood (statehood was granted in 1845). By 1838, Middle Florida, between the Apalachicola River and the Suwannee River, had developed a large population, and was the primary agricultural region in Florida with cotton as the primary product.

In June of 1841, a ship from Cuba unloaded in the port town of St. Joseph. Two crew members were ill. When they came ashore for medical attention they introduced North Florida to its worst epidemic of yellow fever. The illness affected every town in the Territory. Half the population of St. Joseph died, and from June until October, sixty to eighty people in Tallahassee, approximately ten percent of its summer population, died. As a result, Tallahassee officially established the City Cemetery at the northwest corner of the original town plat. (It is included in the Park Avenue Historic District, NR 1979).

Millard F. Caldwell

Governor Millard Fillmore Caldwell (1897-1984), was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and after service in World War I, studied law at the Universities of Virginia and Mississippi. He practiced law in Milton, Florida, and became the Santa Rosa County representative to the state legislature from 1929-1931. He served as a Florida representative to the United States House of Representatives from 1933-1941. In 1925, he married Mary Rebecca Harwood (1896-1986), from Virginia. Miss Harwood was superintendent of schools for King George County, the first woman in Virginia to serve in that capacity. In 1941, they bought a working farm north of Tallahassee which included portions of the old Blackwood Plantation, and named it Harwood Plantation after Mary's family. he was elected Florida's 29th governor. His term in office was one of expanded public services, including education. Caldwell established a Southern Regional Education agreement with the states of Alabama and The result of this agreement was that specialized college credits could be obtained from whichever state school offered it, if it was not provided for within the student's home state. Governor Caldwell initiated the state government Capitol Center to provide a more organized office complex system. One of the state office buildings is named the Caldwell Building. After his term as governor he served as an Administrator of Federal Civil Defense from 1950 to 1952. He served as a state Supreme Court justice from 1962 to 1969, and as the Chief Justice from 1967 to 1969. He died at his home at Harwood Plantation in October of 1984.

Walker-White Stone Carvers

The Walker-White shops of Charleston, South Carolina, were a major 19th century school of tombstone memorial carvers in the Southeast. Thomas Walker immigrated from Scotland, and established a carving shop in Charleston ca.1792. He originated the calligraphic decorating style found in the Blackwood-Harwood Plantations Cemetery (see attached stone rubbing diagram). Walker's son-in-law, John White, established another carving shop in Charleston, and was in business from 1829-1852. White had three sons, Robert, William, and E.R. The sons assisted in the shop, and later started their own shops which remained in business until ca.1900. The Walker and White shops were adjacent to each other on Meeting Street in Charleston. The sons' were early users of steam engine powered chisel carving, and with this tool accomplished intricate and three-dimensional carving. The shops were also assisted in their production by slave craftsmen; John White owned eight slaves at one time. The Charleston and Beaufort areas of South Carolina have many of their stones, and they are found throughout the Southeast. In Florida, their memorials can be found in the Old Huguenot Cemetery in St. Augustine, and the cemeteries in Gainesville and Micanopy. Two 1880s memorials from the White sons shops are in the St. John's Cemetery in Tallahassee, and one Walker stone is in Tallahassee's Old City Cemetery.

HISTORIC SIGNIFICANCE

Charles Black, the son of an affluent family from Beaufort, North Carolina, moved to North Florida hoping to improve his frail physical health. He and his wife, Janet Black (daughter of Robert Raymond Reid), and 37 slaves, moved in 1828 to a farm of 800 acres they called Blackwood Plantation. Blackwood was five miles northwest of Tallahassee and west of Lake Jackson. The log farm buildings consisted of the main house, other residences for the workers, a stable, and a cotton gin building. According to Robert Reid's diary, this main house was close to Charles Black's grave. An early visitor to Leon County commented on the fine houses within the city, but that at the large outlying plantations, luxurious furnishings were housed in poorly constructed log structures.

Janet Black was the daughter of Robert Raymond Reid who later was the Florida Territorial Governor from 1839-1841. Charles Black's death in 1830, only two years after the move, was commented on by his wife who inscribed on his tombstone, [he] "came to Florida in the pursuit of happiness and wealth. He found this grave!" Following the death of her husband, Janet Black married John Graham, and they had one child. Janet died in 1838. Graham was a West Point graduate, became the Adjutant General of Territorial Florida, appointed by Governor Reid in 1840.

Governor Robert Raymond Reid (1789-1841) was born in Prince William's Parish, South Carolina. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1810. He served as the Georgia representative to the United States House of Representatives from 1819-1823, and as a middle circuit judge of Georgia from 1816-1819, and 1823-1825. He served as the city court judge in Augusta, Georgia, in 1827 and 1829. He moved from Augusta to St. Augustine, Florida, in 1832. He served as a judge of the Superior Court of the eastern district of Florida from 1832-1839. Reid married Mary Martha Smith from Georgia in 1837. She was his third wife, the previous two having died. He was elected to serve in 1838 as representative from St. John's County at the St. Joseph constitutional convention, and was elected the convention's president. The convention drafted Florida's first constitution, the first step towards achieving statehood. Representatives from the east advocated two states, and many from the west felt that west Florida should be incorporated into Alabama and Georgia. When the work of the convention was completed in 1841, Reid had successfully advocated the statehood of the entire Territory. Under Reid's direction the unity of the state was retained, and a constitution acceptable to the United States Congress was formulated. Florida historian Charlton Tibeau wrote that Reid "best deserved the title architect of statehood."

In 1839, President Martin Van Buren appointed Reid as the Florida Territory's governor. It was a time of intense political rivalry, and Reid was a member of the young Democratic Party. When prominent Democrats were attacked in public in August of 1840, Reid called on the militia for one day to restore order. The Whigs called Reid a despot, and when Whig President William H. Harrison was elected, he removed Reid from office in April 1841.

Whenever Reid was around Tallahassee he frequented his daughter's home, Blackwood, and during the politically turbulent times Reid escaped from the town and his usual hotel lodging, to the quiet of the log home. Following his removal from the office of governor, he moved to Blackwood.

During the epidemic, Rebecca Black, daughter of Charles and Janet Black, her grandfather Governor Robert Raymond Reid, his wife Martha, their two children, another Reid daughter, Rosalie, were staying at the house at Blackwood. Governor Reid became sick and died on July 1, 1841. Daughter Rosalie Raymond Reid died of the fever on July 6. Rebecca Black died on July 17, and Graham died in Tallahassee on July 20. Travor, the first son of Governor and Mrs. Reid, died shortly thereafter. It is probable that Rosalie Reid, Travor Reid, and possibly Graham are buried in the unmarked graves at Blackwood. Reid's grave went unmarked except for a brick covering for more than a century. In 1965, the Martha Reid Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy placed a granite marker at Reid's grave. The cemetery is the best remaining historic resource associated with this early settlement family, their plantation, and with Governor Robert Raymond Reid.

The grave of Robert Raymond Reid is nominated to the National Register as the only historic resource associated with him known to exist. Reid's most significant activities were as a Territorial Governor and as the President of the Constitutional Convention in St. Joseph. No period resources remain in St. Joseph (currently Port St. Joe), and neither the hotel where he stayed in Tallahassee, nor the log Blackwood house remain. Furthermore, no record exists of Reid's residence in St. Augustine, when he was a judge of the Superior Court there from 1832-1839. Prior to the 1965 placement of an inscribed marker at Reid's grave, it was the most prominently marked of the four graves in the cemetery, that did not have inscriptions. It was located two plots south of his daughter's grave, and was completely surfaced with bricks. Three un-inscribed graves are directly to the north of Charles Black's grave. They are outlined as a group with rows of single bricks. It is known that Reid's daughter, son, granddaughter, and family member John Graham, died in the several weeks that followed Reid's death. The placement of the single grave near the grave of Reid's daughter, and its more elaborate treatment suggest that the Daughters of the Confederacy's choice of placement for the Governor's marker is correct.

Though not related to the significance of the Blackwood-Harwood cemetery, the life of Governor Reid's widow should be noted. Mary Martha Smith Reid (1812-1894), survived her husband, and become a notable Floridian in her own right. With the onset of the Civil War, Mrs. Reid and Dr. Thomas Palmer of Monticello started the Florida Hospital in Richmond which she directed, caring for wounded Confederate soldiers from throughout the South for the duration of the war. For her service the state legislature granted her a pension in 1866. After the war she started a girls' school in Palatka. Robert E. Lee paid her a visit and tribute in 1870, and the Jacksonville Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy was named the Martha Reid Chapter. She is buried in the cemetery of St. Peter's Church in Fernandina Beach.

The Blackwood-Harwood Plantations Cemetery is an excellent example of an early settlement, small family cemetery, typically surrounded with agricultural land, a short distance from the main family home. The cemetery also contains three stone memorials to the Black/Graham family dating from the Territorial Period. Two of these marble stones, dating from 1840 and 1841, have distinctive calligraphic carving and arched top variations. The stone to Janet J.H. Graham is signed "John Wiute," indicating it was carved by John White, of the Walker-White stone carvers in Charleston, South Carolina. Thomas Walker was responsible for developing the distinctive calligraphic style. The distinctive stone carving memorials are significant as rare examples of Territorial Florida Period resources. They are the earliest Leon County stones from this significant carving group. One memorial made by the Walker shop was placed in Tallahassee's Old City Cemetery in 1848. The Reid and Black families were from the South Carolina coastal area which probably accounts for their choice of memorials crafted by prominent Charleston carvers.
