Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Chi-Sandra Garden is located on China Mountain in the Warren Mining District of central Idaho. It occupies approximately 5 acres and is central in a series of three Chinese terraced gardens above the South Fork of the Salmon river. Remnants of an irrigation ditch indicate water was channeled from China Creek to this garden. Chi-Sandra Garden possesses qualities of location, design, workmanship and association that are needed by a Chinese terraced garden to attain listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Chi-Sandra Garden is located on a southeast facing slope. The site spans both sides of a ridge, giving the garden two different aspects. The 8 to 10 terraces on the north side of the ridge have an eastern exposure. The soil here is dark, with a heavy organic component, The area is sheltered by Ponderosa pine and Douglas fir. The terraces on the northern side of the ridge are more distinct since the succession of natural vegetation has retarded natural erosion.

The terraces on the south side of the ridge have a southern This area was constructed on a broader slope and the garden area is larger, composed of 15 or more terraces. The soil on this side of the ridge is sandy. The upper story is thinner here and more sunlight reaches these terraces. The southern garden terraces are less evident. The dry sandy soil has slumped and dense grasses cover the area. Traces of an irrigation ditch exist on the west perimeter of the site. This ditch carried water from China Creek south to the Chi-Sandra Above the ditch to the west, outside the Chi-Sandra Garden site boundaries lies the Old China Trail. On the edge of this trail a modified steel frying pan was located. The frying pan had been repaired with a straightened horseshoe, machine cut nails, a steel barrel hoop rivet and portions of a brass opium tin. This frying pan is probably part of a collection of artifacts from the Ah Toy Garden site below the Chi-Sandra Garden. No other artifacts were located in the Chi-Sandra Garden area.

The selection of the Chi-Sandra Garden site may have been determined by the location of two other garden sites on China Mountain. The central position of the Chi-Sandra Garden may have provided a rest stop between the upper and lower gardens. Chi-Sandra Garden was more isolated and protected and perhaps offered a slight variation in growing conditions.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Chi-Sandra Garden derives significance under Criterion A. The garden contributes to the history of the overseas Chinese on the Idaho mining frontier. The Chi- Sandra Garden is part of a complex of Chinese sites in the Warren Mining District. The Chi-Sandra Garden represents the successful adaptation of traditional Chinese agricultural technology to the terrain of the Salmon River Mountains of Idaho. This site also represents efforts of the 19th century Chinese immigrants to maintain their ethnic identity and lifeways while engaging in a commercially profitable enterprise.

The Chi-Sandra Garden is significant for its location, design, setting, landscape, and association with the Chinese community of the Warren Mining District. The Chi-Sandra Garden reflects a significant adaptation to the micro-environment. Although the garden is situated at the same elevation on either side of a ridge, the difference in aspect, soil composition, soil porosity and exposure provide subtly different growing conditions. It is possible that different types of crops were cultivated, or that successive plantings were made at the Chi-Sandra Garden.

Chi-Sandra Garden is significant to the history of Chinese immigrant communities in the American west. The existence of the Chi-Sandra Garden shows efforts made by the Warren Mining District sojourners to obtain components of traditional diet. The isolated and protected position of the Chi-Sandra Garden has contributed to the integrity of location and setting. Chi-Sandra Garden is significant in itself and as part of the Chinese terraced garden complex of China Mountain.

The Chi-Sandra garden was used only by Chinese gardeners and was not subject to cultural impacts after the garden was abandoned. Natural erosion has occurred and vegetation has encroached onto the terraces. Portions of the irrigation ditch remain evident and this site retains qualities of location, design, setting, workmanship, and association that National Register properties of this type must possess.
