Architectural Description and Significance: When this 1 1/2 story house was built on a large lot on the edge of a ravine, Club Circle was not yet cut through. For this reason, the front door is sited to face NW toward N. Lake Drive. A small wooden bridge once crossed the ravine. With the opening of Club Circle, it became more convenient to enter the house by a door on the south. A garage which is not architecturally significant was built on the SE part of the lot. The house is located in a neighborhood of larger homes and has attractively landscaped grounds. The exterior walls are limestone and there is a steep gable roof with slate shingles and copper gutters. The house is L shaped and the interior visited? <input checked="" type="radio"/> Yes <input type="radio"/> No (over)	Historical Background and Significance: Built for Arnold F. Meyer's brother. Starke Meyer was manager of Milwaukee Tug Boat Co. A	Map Name Thiensville Quadrangle window and door openings are irregular. There is only one ridge dormer, two gable dormers, and two chimneys with distinctive round openings. The living room does not have a basement under it nor attic above. It is two steps down from the rest of the house and has a roof rafter and tie beam. Casement windows open inward over tile sills. There is a basement under and partial attic over the rest of the house. There is a grate in the ceiling under the ridge dormer to provide ventilation for the room beneath.

This house is architecturally significant because it is one of a group of houses built in Milwaukee County by Arnold F. Meyer according to Ernest Flagg's methods of construction. It is also significant because it is one of four houses built by Meyer for members of his own family. This house was built for his brother Starke Meyer, manager of the Milwaukee Tug Boat line
