STATEMENT

The Lend-A-Hand building, while not outstanding in terms of style, successfully combines a certain low-key attractiveness with utility. The U-shaped plan (similar to, but with orientation reversed, to the Hotel Davenport and Parker-Putnam Building) allows all residential spaces a full measure of light and air, with collective service elements contained in a rectangular central core. The facade, although modest, is not mean nor overtly institutional, and projects an air of respectability that would have been appropriate for an organization founded to assist and support women working in Davenport.

ARCHITECTURE

SIGNIFICANCE

HISTORY

The Lend-A-Hand Club Building, built in 1923, is significant for its historical association with the efforts of a local women's social support institution. Its construction on the levee at the foot of Main Street was part of major riverfront improvements completed between 1912 and 1931.

DESCRIPTION

The local Lend-A-Hand chapter was first organized in 1888 by members of the King's Daughter Chapter #1. Dr. Jennie McCowen, a prominent local physician and social welfare promoter, was the fledgling organization's leader. The Lend-A-Hand sponsored a variety of services for women living and working away from home. They included rest and reading rooms for young women who worked in the downtown, social programs, educational lectures and vocational guidance. Lend-A-Hand activities were carried out in various rented rooms in downtown buildings between 1888 and 1923.

When the Lend-A-Hand Club Building was completed in 1923, the organization was able to improve programs in the enlarged facility. The new facility housed a women's merchandise exchange, cafeteria, rest and reading rooms, parlor, shower and bath,

The Lend-A-Hand Club needs to be delisted. It is now a parking lot and has been since at least 2010. Attached is the Davenport City Assessor's parcel record for 105 S Main St. Below is the Googlemaps aerial of the area. Where the red "A" is, is the location of where the u-shaped building was.
