Description

The Jameson Gas Station in Bald Knob has stood on the corner of Highway 367 and Vine Streets since its construction in the early 1930's. Now used as a retail store, the building has not been altered since its gas station days (although the pumps have been removed) and it is in good condition. Clad in brick, the structure has several English Revival details that give it an architectural flavor typical of pre-war gas stations.

The building's rectangular plan is one story tall with no additions. Its single dominant front gable is characteristic of English Revival style buildings as are the stucco and half-timbering on the gable ends, the casement windows, and the arcaded wing wall with arched opening that extends beyond the main building.

A car porch supported by large brick columns is located on the front (south) elevation underneath the front gable. Three twenty-pane casement windows are also grouped below the front gable, another detail typical of English Revival designs. Other casement windows extend across the west and south elevations. The structure's two original garage doors still exist along the front elevation and are separated by brick pilasters. Both the front and side entrances have multi-paned windows on their upper sections. The continuous foundation is made of cast concrete and the gable roof is covered with shingles. The roofline above the garage doors on the front elevation is slightly flared, as is the roof over the arcaded wing on the east elevation.

Significance

The Jameson Gas Station is locally significant under National Register Criterion C for embodying a popular design preference that is no longer common; namely, the use of stylistic architecture normally found on residential structures when designing 1930's gas stations. Often Craftsman features were incorporated into gas station designs, but few survive in White County that received the extensive English Revival detailing that the Jameson station possesses, a fact that makes the structure even more significant.

The structure is also historically significant because of its association with the development of transportation in White County. As stated in Historic Context 4: Boom and Bust, the War and Depression Years, the twenties and thirties saw many changes in the built environment in White County, as well as in the lifestyles of its residents, and these changes were largely due to advances in transportation through road improvement and the inventions of the railroad and the automobile. Therefore, the Jameson Gas Station, which is illustrative of these historic developments, is also locally significant under National Register Criterion A.
