Architecture :

7. Located on the historic main north-south route in the county, this structure is one of few in the state that reveal their original functions as stage coach stops. Unlike most buildings used as inns, taverns or stage coach stops, it was designed with a sense of informality and utility rather than in accordance with current notions of domestic styling. The central chimney is rare in Kentucky brick structures of this period, as is the use of a gallery in pre-Greek Revival architecture. The interior moldings are extremely simple.
