For much of its history, Madison, Indiana, was the focal point for the dissemination of culture, political thought, and industrial products in the old Northwest Territory. The Judge Jeremiah Sullivan House, is located in the Madison Historic District, which was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1973. Subsequently, the town became a pilot Main Street project. In 1982, the community adopted a local preservation program to assure the preservation of this important district. (Braun Photo Center)
