DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Mary Willis Library was designed in 1888 by Atlanta architect Edmund G. Lind. The structure is one of the few developed High Victorian, Queen Anne buildings in Washington. The characteristic details of this style asymmetrical massing, variety in color and texture, molded chimneys, irregular roof line and corner turret are all combined here in a well-scaled building of great warmth and charm that is eminently suited to its function.

The red brick surfaces are patterned to form bands under the roof-line and around the tower, vertical strips that articulate the side walls, and moldings in the chimneys. Stone, inserted in horizontal bands around the arched windows and used as keystones, provides both a color and textural accent. Terra cotta inserts in chimney faces and painted wood in gables add the further variety that is typical of the style.

Inside, similar contrasts of color and texture echo the richness of the exterior. The three rooms have wooden window frames, moldings and beams of pine, darkened with age. Fireplaces of molded and patterned brick with terra cotta inserts add a note of comfort to the main reading room. Stained glass windows, dedicated to Mary Willis, are enclosed in tall, slightly pointed arches in the Water Street facade while simpler geometric patterns of colored glass animate the side windows. The whole makes a unique and warm interior appropriate to its function as a reading room. One hopes that the planned additions of stacks and expansion of facilities will be housed in added space, leaving interiors as pleasant reading rooms.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Mary Willis Library, founded in 1888, was Georgia's first free town and county library. The building which houses the library is an exceptionally fine example of High Victorian picturesque eclecticism that is unique in this area of Georgia. Such forms are more characteristic of a mid-nineteenth-century settlement like Atlanta where the library's designer worked. Edmund G. Lind was an important architect in Atlanta during the ( He came to that city from Baltimore in 1881. He was born and 1800's. educated in London, where he spent his early years of apprenticeship. One of the earliest members of the American Institute of Architects, he was elected a fellow in 1857. One of the buildings he is known to have designed before coming to Atlanta was the Peabody Institute in Baltimore, 1861, 1875-1878, a marble Ranaissance structure with a library whose stacks were of ornamental cast iron. In Atlanta, Lind designed, among others, two buildings which are still standing, the Central Presbyterian Church and the Hotel Jackson (Bentley). Of these, the Jackson, with its mixture of brick. stone, marble and iron materials, is closest in general style to Lind's ' Washington building. Lind left Atlanta for Virginia in 1892. The architect's design for the Mary Willis Library is preserved in a lithograph in the library's collection. The drawing clearly shows, in crisply differentiated patterns, the variety of materials that Lind expected. The building as it now stands seems to be exactly as designed with the possible exception of the roof, which is not covered with the tiles of either wood or terra cotta which are indicated in the drawing.

The building of the Mary Willis Library was made possible through funds given by Dr. Francis T. Willis in memory of his daughter, Mary. Miniatures of Mary Willis and her husband, John Pembroke Jones, hanging in the main reading room and the stained glass windows perpetuate her memory. Dr. Willis was born in Wilkes County though his ancestors came from Virginia. He moved to Augusta, then to Savannah, and in 1867 to Richmond before returning in his late years to Washington. With Samuel Barnett, his half brother, Willis selected the nucleus of the original collection of 300 volumes. The building now houses over 18,000 volumes, and an additional building is being discussed. At his death in 1898 Dr. Willis gave an additional $1200 to the library.

The Mary Willis Library, standing as it does at the corner of Liberty and Jefferson Streets, makes an impressive entrance to the Water-Liberty Street district beyond and its form complements well the range of brick business buildings that extend up Jefferson Street toward the business district.
