DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The walls of several rapidly disintegrating stone and adobe buildings are apparent at Fort Craig, and the earth mounds and moat erected as fortifications at the outbreak of the Civil War can be seen. Some of the structures such as the commanding officer's quarters, the hospital, the guardhouse, and the storehouse can be identified as can the cemetery walls. Coal marks the location of the blacksmith's shop, and there are many broken bottles at the sutler's store. Some vandalism has taken place in recentyears.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

During its thirty years' existence, Fort Craig protected the area's inhabitants from Navajo and Apache attacks, and gave aid to travelers going between Santa Fe and El Paso. These duties became even more important as the flow of westbound miners and settlers increased. But the fort's fame rests mainly on the first major battle of the Civil War in the Southwest, which was fought at Valverde between troops from Fort Craig and the Texas Army commanded by Colonel Henry Sibley. Later, Fort Craig served as headquarters for campaigns against the Apaches in the 1860's and 1870's. It was abandoned in 1885.

The fort was established in 1854, when Fort Conrad, nine miles to the north, was abandoned. The fort was built by mistake on the Pedro Armendariz Grant instead of on public domain lands, and when the mistake was discovered, the Army leased the site from the Armendariz heirs for an annual payment of $20,000 in gold. Although the valley had few inhabitants, and life at the fort could be monotonous, it was a popular assignment with recruits. The green valley to the north and the San Mateo and Magdalena Mountains to the west and northwest provided an attractive setting.

When Fort Fillmore surrendered to the Confederate forces in 1861, the strategic location of Fort Craiq assumed greater significance. Colonel Canby, in command of the Union forces in New Mexico, strengthened Fort Craig to deter the Confederate in-Throughout the summer and fall of 1861, contingents from Fort Craig were involved in skirmishes with the Confederates, but they could not succeed in dislodging them from the Confederate-held area around Mesilla. In February of 1862 Confederate Colonel Sibley began moving his troops along the east bank of the Rio Grande while a scouting party was sent to reconnoiter the fort. Colonel Canby attempted to engage the Texans, but they continued to move toward Panador Ford. This avenue was blocked by Colonel Roberts of Fort Craiq. The two forces finally faced each other, resulting in the Battle of Valverde, the first important Civil War battle for control of the New Mexico rerritory, which took place on February 21. won the day, but probably suffered a slightly greater loss of men. The day-long fight saw about 200 killed and wounded in each army. The defeated Union troops withdrew to Fort Craig, but Colonel Sibley decided not to attack the fort itself, and instead proceeded northward, leaving the forces at the fort cut off from communication with other Union units.

After the Battle of Glorieta Pass and the defeat at Peralta, Union troops followed the retreating Confederates to Fort Craig, but lack of provisions precluded further pursuit. Although soldiers from Fort Craig made forays against Confederates around Mesilla during the next few months, the Civil War in the Southwest was essentially over.

Between 1863 and 1865, Fort Craig became the headquarters for campaigns against the Navajo, Gila Apache, and Mimbres Apache. General Carleton encouraged the development of the area by providing miners and travelers with provisions and escorts, but as the Indian raids ceased, Fort Craig's importance diminished. A detailed report on the fort in 1870 shows that it was still manned by two companies, but that it was in a poor state of repair. By 1883 a traveler would find Fort Craig, while not officially abandoned, nearly deserted by military personnel. The fort was relinquished by the Army in 1885, and the improvements were sold to Captain Jack Crawford, the famous poet scout. That property which the government retained was removed to Forts Bliss and Stanton.
