construction history (descriptions, names, dates, etc. relating to major additions or alterations to original structure)

Former rear wall of building moved (date unknown) to south side to create small addition and addition added to rear of building. Also, a small recessed connector was added to connect 700 with the adjacent building at 702 Main. The connector is very unobtrusive and the two buildings still read as separate structures.

historical background (discuss important persons and events associated with this structure)

The building was originally a drugstore, used by Tego Brothers Drugstore from 1897 to 1908. From 1908 to c.1922, it served as the State Bank of Louisville, and owned by George I. Miller with Edward Affolter as their local manager. The post office was also located in the building from 1916 to c. 1920. From 1922 to 1945, the building became the law offices and political headquarters of Edward Affolter.

statement of significance

The building is one of the best intact historic commercial structures remaining in Louisville. With its pressed tin siding, cornice treatment and window trim intact, it is an excellent example of vernacular late 19th century commercial design commonly found in small towns of the period.

Built in 1894 as a drugstore, the property later served as a bank and post office. It has remained a much recognized and identifiable landmark building by the local citizenry.
