Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

The Albert and Celestine Mabey House, constructed in 1898, is a two-story brick house that is Italianate and Victorian in style. It has a central-block-with-projecting-bay/side-passage plan, and with the exception of two canted bays extending the full height of the house, has a rectangular footprint. Although examples of Victorian styles are well-represented in Salt Lake County from the turn of the twentieth century, those with Italianate massing and details, as found on the Mabey House, are uncommon outside of Salt Lake City. The house is located at 10201 S. 1300 W. on a 0.43-acre parcel and includes a non-contributing outbuilding. Nearby land uses include the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Jordan River Temple to the west, and residential subdivisions. The house is situated about 70 feet back from 1300 West, a busy arterial, and is surrounded by open farm fields to the south and east. To the north is a narrow street (Mabey Lane) lined with mature trees. Because of the substantial open space adjacent to the house, the setting, feeling and association of the Mabey House continues to convey its association with the rural history and landscape of the southwest quadrant of Salt Lake County. The house is in outstanding condition with a high degree of integrity, and is a contributing historic resource of South Jordan.

Narrative Description

The Mabey House faces west. It was constructed by local mason Willard C. Burgon in 1898. The house sits on a foundation of coursed ashlar granite with beaded mortar; the walls are red fired brick laid in a running bond pattern with recessed mortar joints. Red rock-faced brick is visible as quoins. A wide frieze caps the walls under broad eaves, which are in turn punctuated by boxed cornices. The hipped roof is an approximate pitch of 4/12 and is sheathed with asphalt shingles. The eaves extend from the house about 18" and have a wide frieze beneath. At three locations on the house (two on the north and one on the south) a pipe extends from the eaves. The pipe was part of a former drain system that consisted of a wooden dam built back from the edge of the roof to catch the rainfall or snow. Directly behind this dam was a half pipe built into the roof itself. This drainpipe then carried the water of one of the three drains extending through the eaves and down a pipe to the ground. Two chimneys were originally located on the north and east elevations of the house but have both been removed.

The side-passage entry of the house is located on the southwest corner and is covered by a one-story, hipped-roof porch. The porch roof is supported by four Tuscan columns with decorative spindle work between them; the entablature of the porch is identical to that of the main roof of the house. The primary entrance is a single, five-panel door with a single window and a transom. The porch floor is about two feet above the ground and is accessed by three wooden steps.

The significant characteristics of the house are associated with the massing of the house, and include the hipped roof and the projecting, two-story bays on the west and north sides. At the rear of the house is a one-story, hipped-roof ell extending across the full elevation. This ell was built during three different periods. At the center of the rear elevation the ell incorporates an original part of the residence, now housing a bathroom, as evidenced by the coursed granite foundation seen on the main block of the house. South of the original part of the ell on the southeast corner of the residence, the original rear porch has been enclosed and a concrete foundation replaced the original wooden porch floor. This enclosure occurred before the 1970s but was removed about 1978 and rebuilt. It provides a rear entrance to the house. On the northeast corner of the residence a similar enclosure houses a utility room for the home's furnace and water heater, and was constructed about the same time. Both of the non-historic additions are sheathed with wood clapboard. Although the enlarged ell represents alterations that do not date from the historic period, it does not detract

Mabey, Albert & Celestine, House
Name of Property

Salt Lake County, Utah
County and State

from the home's physical integrity because it does not alter the massing of the primary structure and is located on a secondary elevation.

The majority of the windows on the house are double-hung aluminum sash in a one-over-one pattern. Although the sash is not original, the fenestration pattern mimics that of the original. The window openings are defined by segmental arch lintels consisting of two rows of rowlocks; the openings on the first story are further embellished by a course of protruding headers. The sills are wood. In the center of the bay on the first story of the dwelling's façade is a fixed window, wider than the double-hung windows, which originally had a transom. The muntin defining the transom, however, has been removed.

The interior of the house has an entry hall just inside the front door with a staircase on the south wall that leads to the upper floor. To the north is a living room with the dining room directly behind. The entry hall leads to the kitchen, and a pantry is located north of the kitchen behind the dining room. Four bedrooms and a bathroom are located in the upper story.

A few feet from the rear wall of the house is a hipped-roof, two-car garage. It is clad with horizontal wood siding and although it is not of the historic period and is thus a non-contributing building, the garage is compatible with the style, scale and character of the house. The current owners built the garage in 1987.

Owing to recent alterations of 1300 West street, the property associated with the house sits four- to five-feet lower than the road. A retaining wall topped by an iron fence separates the property from the public sidewalk at the edge of the road and concrete steps lead down to the yard. Mature trees are located at the rear of the property, and children's playground equipment is located south of the house. Overall, despite its location in a rapidly growing community, the Mabey House retains a semi-rural feel due the adjacent open fields and the large lot on which it is situated. The residence has undergone few alterations and has a high degree of integrity.

8. Statement of Significance

Applicable National Register Criteria

(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing.)

- A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Criteria Considerations

(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply.)

Property is:

- A Owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- B removed from its original location.
- C a birthplace or grave.
- D a cemetery.
- E a reconstructed building, object, or structure.
- F a commemorative property.
- G less than 50 years old or achieving significance within the past 50 years.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria.)

The Albert and Celestine Mabey House, an Italianate and Victorian house constructed in 1898, is eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criteria A and C with a period of significance from 1898 to 1912. The property is eligible within the Historic Resources of South Jordan, Utah Multiple Property Submission. The associated historic context is the "Agricultural Expansion 1892-1913." The Mabey House is significant under Criterion A in the area of Agriculture because it is associated with a period in which South Jordan changed from one of subsistence living to a community of stability and prosperity due to the expansion of agricultural ventures. Although Mabey availed himself of the work associated with the nearby mines and smelters, after he settled in South Jordan in 1884 his primary occupation was farming and raising sheep. He and his partners, his brother Joseph and Samuel Maynard, wintered their flocks west of the Great Salt Lake and in southern Idaho. Mabey participated in and benefitted from South Jordan's economic expansion, which in turn is reflected in this property.

The house is also significant under Criterion C as a well-preserved example of a late Victorian house form built by South Jordan residents during this time period. It clearly conveys the transition from the architecture found during the historic context, "Settlement (Canal Building Period) 1859-1891", during which the first permanent structures of the community consisted of locally-available materials such as log and adobe brick constructed in simple massing forms. By the time the Mabey House was constructed, Salt Lake County residents had access to the stylistic trends and materials used nationally. The Mabey House reflects this exposure to wider markets and the greater affluence enjoyed by a number of South Jordan farmers associated with the "Agricultural Expansion 1892-1913" historic context. The Mabey House is one of several homes constructed at the turn of the twentieth century in South Jordan constructed in the Victorian style, but is also unique as the community's only residence from this period with a nod to the Italianate style and a side-passage plan. The house is in excellent condition and is a contributing historic resource of South Jordan.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

History of the Albert and Celestine Mabey House

Title records show that as early as 1875 the land on which the Mabey House is located belonged to John A. Beckstead, whose father, Alexander Beckstead, was South Jordan's earliest settler. Three years later the property was deeded to James Shields, who died suddenly of appendicitis in 1884. In 1898, the Probate Division of the Salt Lake County District Court ordered the sale of the Shields' property to the highest bidder, in order to pay for debts left by Shields and incurred by his widow. Albert Mabey was the highest bidder on this 30-acre parcel of land, paying $2,000 in 1898.<sup>1</sup> Soon after purchasing the property, Mabey began the construction of his new home, hiring local stone mason Willard C. Burgon. Burgon constructed the domed LDS chapel in Riverton (demolished), as well as many other buildings in the Salt Lake Valley.<sup>2</sup>

Born in 1843 in Wraxall, Dorset County, England, Albert Mabey immigrated to Utah with his family at the age of 19. By the time he married Celestine J. Wood, in 1873, Albert had fought in the Utah Black Hawk War and helped in the construction of the trans-continental railroad. Celestine was born in Bountiful, Utah in 1855. Albert and Celestine first settled in 1873 in Bountiful, where their first four children were born. After several of Albert's sisters had settled in South Jordan, Albert and Celestine moved their family to the south end of the Salt Lake Valley, where Albert and his brother, Joseph, hauled ore from Brighton and Butterfield canyons to the smelters in the valley. In 1884, the Mabeys moved to South Jordan, living in a small log house on a farm he purchased at the west end of James Shields' farm about

1230 West and 10090 South.<sup>3</sup> By the time the Mabeys constructed their house on 1300 West, Celestine had given birth to ten children; the six who lived to adulthood could enjoy their parents' comfortable home as children and young adults.<sup>4</sup>

After settling in South Jordan his primary occupation was farming and raising sheep, in partnership with his brother, Joseph, and Samuel Maynard. They wintered their flocks in Skull Valley and later west of the Great Salt Lake. For summer range they went as far as southern Idaho. In 1900, Albert was 60 and he dissolved his partnership with his brother and Maynard. He kept his flocks closer to home so he did not have to travel so much.<sup>5</sup> He also served as the director of the South Jordan Canal Company during this time, a position he held for the last sixteen years of his life. Albert died in March 1912 and Celestine continued to live in the home, often taking in boarders, until her death in 1932.<sup>6</sup> When the estate was settled in 1938, the house went to Albert and Celestine's youngest son, Walter A. Mabey.<sup>7</sup> Because Walter and his wife Ethel had a home of their own, the house was rented to one of Albert and Celestine's grandsons and his wife, Leo and Reola Newbold. Several other family members lived in the house over the years. Often while one family lived downstairs, others would live upstairs.<sup>8</sup>

Before her death, Ethel Mabey gave title of the house to her daughter, Helen Mabey Burgon, in 1977. After years of renters the house had fallen into disrepair and was slated for demolition, but Helen's son Kim and his wife, Sandra wanted to renovate the house. It is of special significance to the Burgons, as it is not only the home of Kim's maternal great-grandparents, but his paternal great-grandfather, Willard C. Burgon constructed the house.<sup>9</sup>

Architecture

The Mabey House represents a major shift in the architecture of South Jordan. The homes built in South Jordan at the close of the nineteenth century were far more substantial structures than those of previous decades, which were constructed of locally-produced materials with simple massing and little ornamentation. The use of Victorian and Italianate references evident in the Mabey House illustrates the changes taking place throughout Utah at the turn of the twentieth century. Rail transportation and access to national markets lessened the isolation of rural areas in the state, especially along the Wasatch Front, and affluent citizens could avail themselves of the building guides, pattern books and home magazines used nationally as well as the necessary materials to construct the homes promoted in the literature. The historic resource survey of South Jordan, undertaken in 2010, identified only 12 extant buildings constructed during the "Agricultural Expansion period (1892-1913)."

Compared to most other houses of the area in South Jordan and other rural parts of the county, the Mabey House is fairly large. The asymmetrical massing of the central-block-with-projecting-bays plan adds to the picturesque appearance of the house, particularly when juxtaposed with the humble, symmetrical classical-influenced houses of the previous generation.

The Albert and Celestine Mabey House is one of the best surviving examples of Victorian architecture in the community and retains a high degree of integrity.

River into the river bottoms immediately west of the river and the dry bench-lands above. Until the construction of the South Jordan Canal in 1876, agriculture existed at a subsistence level, and dwellings were generally crude dug-outs cut into the banks of the river, simple log cabins or small adobe structures. But the canal, along with three subsequent canals, transformed the bench lands into productive farms, and large tracts of land were opened to cultivation so that crops could be raised for profit.

Public infrastructure continued to improve through the teens. Rail transportation allowed access to national markets, an electric railway provided transit along the Wasatch Front, and a culinary water system and electricity made life comfortable. The introduction of the sugar beet provided a new cash crop and the use of open range west of town for sheep grazing expanded the agricultural economy through the early 20th century. The city incorporated in 1935.

After World War II, the local economy shifted from agriculture to manufacturing. Although commodity prices were high during WWII, family farms were no longer profitable. South Jordan residents turned to poultry raising and mink ranches, which did not require full-time effort. The infrastructure built for the Kearns Army Air Base and inexpensive land brought rapid subdivision growth to the west side of the valley. Although South Jordan limited growth by establishing a zoning requirement of one-acre and five-acre minimum lot sizes in much of the city, local officials rescinded the building restrictions in the 1990s and the community has experienced a high level of residential and commercial development.

ABSTRACT/SUMMARY COMMENTS:

The Albert and Celestine Mabey House is locally significant under National Register Criteria A and C in the areas of Agriculture and Architecture. Constructed in 1898 by local mason Willard C. Burgon for Albert & Celestine Mabey, the building is a well-preserved local example of late nineteenth-century Victorian design. The Mabey family were prosperous farmers and ranchers in South Jordan and their handsome farm home reflects the significant transitional period between pioneer subsistence settlement and stable agricultural development and prosperity.
