Before building Ammadelle, Thomas E. B. Pegues contacted architect Calvert Vaux who showed him examples of his works along the Hudson River. Brought from England in 1850 to become a partner of Andrew Jackson Downing, a nationally dominant tastemaker in domestic architecture and landscaping, Vaux practiced independently in the years immediately following Downing's death in 1852. After moving to New York City in 1857, he invited Frederick Law Olmsted to collaborate on the design for Central Park. Their success in this competition was followed by a continuing association dominated by Olmsted.

Vaux' plans and elevations for Ammadelle were prepared in 1857 when he was 34 years old. Additional detail drawings were prepared in 1860 as construction was underway. Except for the first floor plan, the original signed drawings are in the possession of the present owners.

With the exception of balconies across the rear and a wine cellar, construction was complete when halted by the Civil War; the missing features have never been added. Subsequent changes have been limited to replacement of three first-floor mantels in the late 19th century and recent modernization in the kitchen. The quality of the original design and construction and continuing maintenance have necessitated minimal repair.

Built of red brick with white Italianate trim and black shutters, the house has an irregular plan. Porches on the east (front) and north provide shaded, open, outdoor rooms. The front entrance is deeply recessed and opens into a reception hall connecting through great double sliding doors to the stair hall at the rear. To the right are double parlors; through the rear parlor one can enter a small library. To the left is the dining room with a small conservatory at the south end. A sequence of pantries and halls leads to the kitchen in a one-story wing. There is one bedroom on the first floor rear and five on the second floor. The dominant effect of the interiors is one of spaciousness and solidity. Vaux' details are as well ordered as the overall scheme. Vaux was both architect and landscape architect. Appropriately, the 7-acre site is developed with picturesque curves defining lawns and plantings.

| STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE | | | |

Excellently maintained with minimal change, Ammadelle is a fine example of the work of Calvert Vaux in the period just prior to the Civil War. Though young, Vaux was already professionally respected as both architect and landscape architect. Inclusion of a similar design in the second and third edition of Vaux' Villas and Cottages (p. 313, Design No. 32) suggests that he regarded Ammadelle as representative of his best work.

Ammadelle's location in Oxford, Mississippi, demonstrates that wealthy Mississippians of that era could keep abreast of architectural fashions. The crippled economy which followed so shortly after has protected the environment from destructive developmental pressures.
