DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The church whose origin mounts to the sixteenth century occupies a vrey peculiar place in the town's aquare or "plaza": contrary to the tra- ditional setting at one ot he sides, the church facade looks to the nearby river. Traditions says that people moved from the primitive place to prevent floods but the church remained in its place.

Nothing pertaining to the first building remains. These is only a church dating from the second half of the eighteenth century, whose rect-angled plan is very similar to that of Vega Alta, with three naves and a presbyterium covered by a cupole without lantern or tambour. The typical buttresses support the walls and a belfry crowns the simple facade.

It has an interesting tomb of the romantic period in the front yard or atrium. Unfortunately, a grotto has been erected in the back of the building but can be removed without damaging it.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The church seems to occupy the original emplacement of a chapel mentioned in documents and chronicles since the sixteenth century. Its historical significance is great and its particular and unique importance lies on the fact of the existence of superb rococo silver antependium, gold monstrance and other liturgical objects of silver dating from the last quarter of the eighteenth century already mentioned in 1775 by Abbad y La Sierra in his Historia politica... de Puerto Rico, who said about this church that it was the "... best adorned of all the Island."

Being abandoned in this century during eighteen years, with no permanent attention, the people of the town guarded jealously their treasure and returned it to the church once a priest was appointed, It needs a good restoration in matter of images and reredoz which can be succesfully done because the inventories exist in the Archive at the Archbishopric.

Other

Silver antependium from the eighteenth century.

Chiseled gold monstrance dated 1802.

Other silver ornaments.
