DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

1.

James Duane Doty built the Grand Loggery, a large squared log house, late in 1845 and moved into it before the end of the year. It is a 1 1/2 story structure, T-shaped in plan, with gable roof, and with a recessed porch under a wall dormer in the center of the front side of the house (cross member of the T). Second story gable ends and dormer are clapboarded. The house is spacious, with a large living room, dining room, kitchen, and central hallway downstairs. Upstairs are two large bedrooms, two smaller ones, and a storeroom. Mrs. Doty is said to have named the house "Grand Loggery" because of its size in comparison with other log houses of the time.

The original house, owned by the City of Neenah, was moved a short distance from its original site to a permanent place in Doty park in 1928. It was measured for the Historic American Buildings Survey in 1936. After having been used as a public museum for a number of years, the Grand Loggery was found in 1948 to be no longer safe for public use because of damage by wood borers. It was therefore torn down and rebuilt into an exact replica of the original. In the reconstruction, much trim and other salvageable material was used in order to retain as much integrity as possible. The ceiling of one upstairs bedroom is of the original board planking. All rooms have softwood floors. Other rooms on the second floor have plaster walls, exact duplicates of the originals.

The Grand Loggery continues to serve as a public museum and contains numerous documents, silver, china, furniture, and various other items that belonged to the Doty family.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In 1823, James Duane Doty, a protégé of Governor Lewis Cass of Michigan Territory and a young lawyer, was appointed judge of the federal "additional court," with jurisdiction from Mackinac to the Mississippi. From that time until his departure from Wisconsin in 1861, he was an influential and important figure in law, politics, land speculation, and various other areas of Wisconsin history.

As a judge, Doty did much to bring law and order to the crude frontier, but his rulings were often considered discriminatory, largely because they upheld the rights of Indians to adhere to their own laws in their own traditional ways, and in 1832 he lost his position. He served in the Michigan territorial legislature (1833-1835), as delegate in Congress from Wisconsin territory (1838-1841), and was agent for John Jacob Astor in promoting the village of Astor (Green Bay).

As agent for capitalists or for cooperative investment companies, Doty bought heavily at public land sales, laying out towns and planning a system of canals to enhance the value of lands thus acquired. At Belmont in 1836 he managed to have Madison elected as the Wisconsin capital, and himself made a building commissioner. From 1841-1844 he served as Wisconsin's second territorial governor.

In 1845, Doty moved to Doty Island (Neenah) and, with his son Charles, promoted the townsite of Menasha. He was delegate to the first constitutional convention, and served two terms (1849-1853) in Congress, where he opposed Clay's compromise plan and worked to get government aid for building railroads in Wisconsin and to the Pacific. After trying in vain to win election to the U. S. Senate, Doty accepted appointment by President Lincoln in 1861 as superintendent of Indian affairs for the Utah Territory. In 1863 Lincoln appointed him governor of Utah Territory, a position he held successfully until his death in 1865.

Although the Grand Loggery is a reconstruction, it is accurately executed in a suitable environment on land originally owned by Doty and named for him, and is presented in a dignified and appropriate manner in keeping with the plan for which it was reconstructed. It is the only structure in Wisconsin with proper and sufficient associative significance relating to Doty to merit nomination to the National Register. One other house associated with Doty remains in the state but has lost all structural and architectural integrity through numerous alterations over a long period of time.

Grand Loggery

The original Grand Loggery was certified architecturally significant by the Historic American Buildings Survey twelve years before reconstruction became necessary. The reconstruction is an exact replica of the original, retains at least some construction materials salvaged from the original, and is furnished largely with authentic Doty documents, housewares and furniture.

It is believed that for purposes of nomination to the National Register, the reconstructed Grand Loggery adequately meets the criteria considerations set forth by the National Park Service.
