On March 3, 1839, Congress appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of "erecting a suitable state house or public building for the use of the territorial legislature." In the same year the Florida Legislative Council passed an act for the erection of a new capitol. (Acts of Florida, 1869). Completed by June, 1845, it housed the first session of the state legislature. This was the third Capitol Building to be constructed in Tallahassee and it remains today as the nucleus of the 4 1/5 present structure.

The Capitol of Florida is a three story building with walls of the "best hard burnt brick." The exterior of the building is stuccoed and painted white. The main facale of the building faces east, and on this side is the larger face its two Doric porticos. A wide stair rises to the east register portico. Six unfluted columns carry a cornice, entablature and pediment which are a combination of the Doric and Tuscan orders. A low balustrade surrounds the roof of the original portion of the building at its outer edge. The entire entablature of the east portico and its pediment and the projecting cornice of the body of the building are of wood. Both building and portico roofs are covered with slate. All windows are double-hung sash.

The Capitol Building is approximately 250 feet in length by 215 in breadth. The basement has two wide halls crossing each other at right angles. The second floor of The Capitol has two halls, a north-south and an east-west, running the full length and breadth of the building respectively. On this floor are the offices of the Governor and his cabinet. The north-south hall is lined with portraits of former governors of Florida. The third floor of The Capitol contains the Senate and House Chambers and the many committee rooms of the Florida Legislature.

The height of The Capitol, not including the dome, is approximately 80 feet. The dome is about one third the height of The Capitol proper. Added in 1902 to replace the wooden cupola, the dome is classic in detail. There are recessed niches in each of the four corners and three round arched windows on each side are separated by engaged Ionic columns. A low balustrade surmounted by urns with finials surrounds the dome at the point from which the ribs spring and a lantern tops the entire structure.

The core of the present Capitol remained relatively unchanged until 1902 when the building was repaired and enlarged. The legislature appropriated $75,000 for the erection of the north and south wings of the present building and the replacement of the cupola with the present dome. Since 1902, there have been three further enlargements of the building. In 1921, the legislature appropriated $250,000 for the erection of the present east and west wings. The architect for this work was H. J. Klutho of Jacksonville, the designer of the original Governor's Mansion in Tallahassee. In 1936 a new north wing was added, and in 1946, a new south wing. Presently under construction are the legislative wings designed by Reyholds, Smith and Hill of Jacksonville. These four-story wings are of pre-cast stone on a concrete frame and will be connected to The Capitol Building by covered walkways.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

When the United States acquired Florida from Spain in 1821, the provinces of East and West Florida combined to form one territory with Andrew Jackson as its first governor. Jackson was succeeded shortly thereafter by William P. DuVal and the government of the Territory of Florida was in the hands of the Governor and a Legislative Council. Because Pensacola and St. Augustine were the only two towns of any importance in the territory and had each been the capitol of a Spanish province, the first Legislative Council met in Pensacola in 1822, while the second was held the next year in St. Augustine. Due to the inconvenience of such an arrangement, the Legislative Council of 1823, authorized Governor DuVal to appoint two commissioners to select a centrally located site for the permanent capitol.

On March 24, 1824, Governor DuVal, having received and approved the report of Commissioners Williams and Simmons on the selection of a capitol site, issued a proclamation declaring a seat of government to be "in the county of Gadsden, situated about a mile southwest from the old deserted fields of Tallahassee, about a half mile south of the Oke-lock-o-ny and Tallahassé, trail, at a point where the old Spanish road is intersected by a small trail running southwardly." Congress approved the site and on May 24, 1824, Congress set aside a grant of a quarter section of land for the use of the territorial government. In obediance to Governor DuVal's proclamation of March 24, the legislators met in the log cabin capitol on the southeast corner of the present capitol grounds. It was during this session, that the legislature passed an act to provide for the laying out of the town, the construction and financing of the first permanent capitol building and the sale of Tallahassee lots. On December 11, 1824, the legislative Council designated a town called Tallahassee and proclaimed it the seat of government. The word "Tallahassee" is of Creek Derivation, meaning literally "old town" but it is frequently translated "old fields." Tallahassee was laid out symmetrically with the Capitol Square at the center, and it was incorporated on December 9, 1825.

Construction on the wooden Capitol Building which was to replace the log structure began in 1826. One wing was finished the following year, but a series of difficulties prevented completion of the building as planned. The present Capitol Building was begun in 1839 and completed in 1845. This building was the scene of the Secession Convention of 1861, which withdrew Florida from the Union and declared it to be an independent nation. It also housed the Constitutional Conventions of 1865, 1868 and 1885, the last of which adopted the Constitution under which the state is now governed. It was here, also, that the Florida Canvassing Board counted in four Republican electors in the disputed election of 1876, this assuring the election of Rutherford B. Hayes as President of the United States.

Somewhat unusual is the fact that Florida's State Capitol was not located in an already existing town. Rather the town was planned around the Capitol which was designed as its first building. In spite of all the alterations to the building, its center is still the old brick Capitol of 1845.
