Physical Description

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 is located on the east side of S. Church Street in downtown Livingston (population 3,560), the county seat of Overton County, Tennessee. The building is a good example of a modified, mid-20th century Quonset hut. Erected in 1948, the American Legion Bohannon Post #4 building is a one-story, prefabricated structure with a skeleton of a row of semi-circular steel ribs covered with corrugated metal sheet siding. Added shortly after the erection of the Quonset hut, its brick false front containing large groupings of decorative glass blocks is indicative of mid-20th century commercial vernacular facades. The interior space of Bohannon Post #4 remains substantially intact with minimal alterations. The openness of the main hall continues to evoke a sense of community as a center for social gatherings, events, and meetings.

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 is situated within a small lot in downtown Livingston. The building occupies the entire lot and fronts a sidewalk along S. Church Street. Overgrown grass surrounds the building and there is no evidence of planned landscaping.

The rectangular-shaped building sits on a poured concrete foundation. While the traditional Quonset hut measured 20' x 48', the Bohannon Post #4 building is a larger version oftentimes referred to as a "Utility Building" or "Elephant Hut," and measuring 40' x 100'.¹ Reportedly, "a single unit could be erected by a team of 10 men in 300 man hours, weighed only 23,381 pounds, and could be shipped in 23 crates."² Due to the efficiency in the construction of the building, there were a total of 11,800 Utility Buildings fabricated by the end of World War II. Following World War II, military surplus of Quonset huts was sold to the public and used for a variety of functions.³

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 building occupies the entire parcel on which it is situated. The building fronts the east side of S. Church Street, southeast of Courthouse Square in Livingston. A concrete sidewalk separates the street from the building. There is no setback between the sidewalk and building. Vegetation along the north consists of a grassed lawn and planting beds. Along the south, vegetation is less planned with a scattering of overgrown bushes and ivy. A narrow, concrete slab is situated to the rear (east) of the building.

The exterior of the building reflects the original Quonset hut structure as well as a false front of brick construction added to the façade and fronting S. Church Street. The façade is a brick, false front consisting of three bays (W, D, W) with a centered, recessed entry. The entry consists of a wood door with single-light transom flanked by groupings of 42 decorative glass blocks situated within the angled walls. End bays each consist of 90 glass blocks (6 high and 15 wide).

Surmounting the glass block groupings, a total of 6 transom windows containing 3, fixed lights allow for additional light to enter the building. A brick belt course extends above the 3 bays of the facade. Above the belt course, brickwork changes from a running bond to American bond within the cornice. The brick cornice is modest with brick headers positioned along rounded corners. A semi-circular pediment hides the metal body of the Quonset hut. Reportedly, the brick, false front that we see today was added to the façade after its initial construction.⁴ It is unknown as to the date the false front was added; however, its style is indicative of mid-20th century vernacular commercial architecture.

The north and south elevations offer a lengthwise view of the body of the Quonset hut. Paint fragments indicate that the metal was at one time painted green. There are no window or door openings located on either elevation. An off-centered metal ventilation pipe extends from the building near the rear of the north elevation. A slightly off-centered, interior brick chimney is located near the rear of the structure.

The east elevation is green-painted corrugated metal with a centered, metal double door. A square, metal vent is located directly above the rear door. On either side of the rear double door, rectangular-shaped metal patching suggests the presence of window openings at one time. Utility boxes and associated piping originate on the rear elevation.

The building is basically a single-room cylindrical frame facility with interior dividing walls installed to create separate spaces for various functions. The floor plan is generally organized around a large, rectangular-shaped hall with small administrative office spaces located at the front of the building and bathrooms, kitchen, and storage space to the rear. An open attic is accessible near the rear. Quonset hut walls typically consist of airspace between the steel frame, followed by insulation and most often masonite or fiber board. Such is the case with the Bohannon Post #4 building; however, the majority of the walls are covered with a modern, vertical laminate paneling. Wood flooring is stained unless otherwise covered with carpeting or linoleum. Like early Quonset huts, the arch of the building extends to the floor providing a cylinder-like interior space. Ceilings of the Bohannon Post #4 are dropped allowing for the concealment of electrical equipment and providing an attic space above. This was a common practice for the adaptive reuse of the Quonset Hut. Original interior doors are paneled, stained and feature original hardware in most instances.

Upon entering the Bohannon Post #4 building through the main entry on S. Church Street, a small, central entry space is flanked by an office on the south and a former library to the north. The entry hall is irregular in shape as a result of the angled and recessed entryway. The room extends only the width of the recessed entryway. Unlike much of the Bohannon Post #4 building, the entry hall features stained wood wainscoting and linoleum flooring. A metal mail slot and wood basket are installed on the main entry door. Three original doors lead from the entry hall to the adjacent office to the south, the former library to the north, and the events hall to the east. The door leading to the office space features replacement hardware.

The small office space located at the southwest corner of the building features carpeted floors and dropped ceiling. The ceiling appears to be higher than that of the events hall. A large window opening on the west elevation accommodates the 90 glass block grouping visible on the facade. The glass blocks do not reach the top of the window opening. This space features brick in-fill, most likely installed as a result of the placement of an air conditioning unit located within the window opening. A long fluorescent light hangs from the ceiling.

Opposite the office, north of the entrance hall, the former Livingston library is situated. This room is larger than the office, extending eastward into the open events hall. The top portion of a former wall survives suggesting that the original space was identical to that of the front office and was later extended to accommodate the growing needs of the library. Other evidence suggesting a later extension of the space includes a clear separation of interior wall siding. The original space features laminate paneling that matches the entrance hall, while the later extension walls match the stained laminate siding of the events hall. The floor is covered with carpet. A large window opening cases the glass blocks visible on the facade. A 3-light transom and air conditioning unit are located directly above the glass blocks.

The principal events hall is accessible through the central door located on the east wall of the entrance hall. The events hall is a large, open space featuring tongue-and-groove wood flooring and faux-stained laminate walls. Ceilings are dropped with 2 sets of fluorescent lights running the length of the room. Original speakers and fans hang from the ceiling. A row of wood folding chairs reminiscent of mid-20th century auditorium seating is located along the northern wall of the events hall. A few wood benches are also located near the northern wall of the room. Neither the folding chairs nor benches are attached to the flooring. A small wood stage is located near the southern wall of the events hall. The stage is approximately 2 feet high. An original microphone hangs from the ceiling above the stage. Various items not attached to the building itself are located near the rear (east end) of the room, including a metal voting box that was utilized between the 1960s and 1980s when the building served as a voting precinct.

The men's bathroom is accessible at the southeast corner of the events hall. There is no door leading to the bathroom. Upon entering through the open doorway, a partial dividing wall extending from the south wall of the building creates a u-shaped hall. At the east end of the hall, a smaller door opening leads to the bathroom and washroom space. Walls within the u-shaped passage and bathroom match that of the events hall. The ceilings are wood flush board and are relatively lower than the front portions of the building.

The women's restroom is accessed via a door located at the northeast corner of the events hall. Like the men's bathroom, a partial dividing wall extends from the north wall of the building creating a u-shaped hall leading to the women's restroom. At the east end of the hall, a doorway leads to the women's restroom. A sink is located on the south wall. A single step leads to a short elevated platform at the southeast corner of the bathroom. Two toilet stalls are located on the elevated platform. The bathroom, including partitioned hallway, features linoleum flooring and laminate paneled walls painted yellow. The interior walls of the bathroom are bead board. Stall doors are also painted yellow.

A door centered at the eastern wall of the events hall leads to the building's kitchen area. The walls match that of the events hall and floors are linoleum. The dropped ceiling is lower than the ceiling of the events hall. A modern, ell-shaped countertop extends from the west wall of the kitchen into the center of the room. A stove, sink, and countertop are also located along the northern wall of the room. A furnace is situated just west of the stove along the northern wall. The kitchen countertop along the northern wall appears to be original to the building.⁵ A white, paneled door is located on the east elevation and leads to the exterior of the building. Unlike the other interior doors within the building, this door reaches the ceiling and is surrounded by a white painted door frame. The door is a modern installation. It is not visible from the exterior of the building as it is hidden behind the large, metal double doors on the rear (northeast) elevation.

South of the kitchen is an ell-shaped storage area. The room is accessed via a door located on the south wall of the kitchen. Upon entering the storage area, modest wood stairs with no string is located along the northeast wall and lead to an attic space above. A single fluorescent light is attached to a dropped ceiling. The walls of the room are the same laminate paneling as the events hall and the flooring is exposed concrete. A chimney is located on the west wall of the storage room and is completely covered with laminate paneling. Long-time residents of Livingston, recall the chimney being used with a large pot-bellied stove for heat during the early years of the.⁶

The attic of the American Legion Bohannon Post #4 building is an open space with wood, board flooring and metal walls and ceiling. The corrugated metal walls and ceiling are rounded and show the building's arch-rib T-section steel frame, the typical construction method for the mid-20th century Quonset hut designed for the military.⁷ Unlike the lower level, the steel frame in the attic is exposed with no insulation or interior siding. The front three-quarters or more of the attic space is raised approximately 3 feet above the rear portion into which one enters from the stairs. The raised section is wood and supports the buildings electrical equipment. A fan and vent are installed in the raised platform and face into the events hall. A brick chimney extends from the storage room below, and through the attic space and ceiling/roof. A large ventilation fan is located on the rear (northeast) elevation of the attic.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 in Livingston, Tennessee is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under criterion A for its local significance in social history. The current building is a modified World War II-era Quonset hut, the only known American Legion post in the State to be housed in one of these iconic World War II military structures. The building has hosted multiple social organizations and has been used by the local community as a gathering place, event venue, reception hall, meeting hall, dance hall, library, voting precinct, and veteran's service office. The building has served the Town of Livingston and the surrounding area since the property was acquired by the American Legion in 1949, and has become a unique and integral part of the community. The building retains its historic integrity as a military surplus Quonset hut, historically modified to adapt to its many mid-20th century uses.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The American Legion was formed in Paris, France 15-17 March 1919, by former members of the American Expeditionary Force, who were veterans of World War I.⁸ The Legion was granted a national charter by the U.S. Congress on 16 September 1919.⁹ The American Legion's primary focus was to be the care of disabled veterans, and the establishment of hospitals and other services for veterans. The scope of these services has expanded over the years to include compensation and pension issues, as well as other advocacy services. The Legion sponsored the creation of the U.S. Veteran's Administration in 1930, and was instrumental in the creation of the G.I. Bill in 1944.¹⁰ In the year 2000, the total membership of the American Legion, made up of veterans of every war and military action since World War I, was approximately 3,000,000, with 15,000 local posts worldwide.¹¹

Since its establishment, American Legion posts have been woven into the social fabric of their respective communities. This is especially true of smaller communities such as Livingston, Tennessee, where American Legion posts have served a multitude of roles throughout the years, often becoming one of the most utilized and familiar gathering places in the community. Such is the case with Bohannon Post #4.

American Legion Bohannon Post #4 was established in Livingston, Tennessee on 14 April 1922, the first such post established in a primarily rural area of Tennessee, and the fourth established in the state, as indicated by the post number. The post was named for Lieutenant Shirley D. Bohannon, the son of a local judge, and an early casualty of World War I.¹² Bohannon Post #4 was organized by a group of World War I veterans from Livingston and other parts of Overton County, led by prominent local attorney, George O. Lea, who was elected first commander of the post.¹³ The post was chartered on 24 June 1924.¹⁴

According to the local paper of the time, the Livingston Enterprise, Overton County's casualty list from World War I "was larger in proportion to population than that of any other county on record."¹⁵ The newspaper pointed out the participation of the men of Overton County in World War I, and their disproportionate sacrifices, and used this as a point of emphasis and justification for the establishment of the local American Legion post. The editor of the newspaper saw the American Legion as an organization that could bring fundamental change to the community when he editorialized that, "an intense effort will be made to enroll every veteran in the county in the Legion Post. Later on, after this has been accomplished, it is the intention of the Post to become a factor for good in the progress and development of the county."¹⁶ Bohannon Post #4 was seen as more than just an organization and meeting place for local veterans, it was seen as an integral part of the post-World War I development of Livingston and the surrounding area.

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 met in the Overton County Courthouse (NR/1980) from 1922 until 1949, when the Post moved to its present location on Church Street. The post acquired the property from Mr. W. T. Reagan in November 1949.¹⁷ The Quonset hut was purchased and erected the previous year by Reagan and briefly used as an Army Surplus store.¹⁸

The Quonset hut was designed as a lightweight prefabricated structure of corrugated galvanized steel. The structure was semicircular in cross section, and was based on the Nissen hut developed by the British in World War I.¹⁹ The name of the structure comes from the site where they were first manufactured, Quonset Point, at the Davisville Naval Construction Battalion Center, Davisville, Rhode Island, home of the famed Navy Seabees.

The Quonset hut was born of the U.S. Navy's need for a lightweight, all-purpose building that could be shipped anywhere in the world and erected without skilled labor.²⁰ The first Quonset huts were delivered in 1941. The original design was a 16 feet x 36 feet structure formed with steel members and covered with corrugated steel sheets. The two ends were most often covered with plywood, which had doors and windows. The interior was insulated and had a pressed wood lining and wood floor. As the design evolved, and its utility increased, the size of the structure grew to a standard of 20 feet x 48 feet, with 720 square feet of usable floor space. Interiors were flexible, allowing for use as barracks, latrines, offices, medical and dental offices, isolation wards, housing, bakeries, and numerous other uses.²¹

While the traditional Quonset hut measured 20 feet x 48 feet, the one purchased by W.T. Reagan in 1948 is a larger version, oftentimes referred to as a "Utility Building" or "Elephant Hut," and measuring 40 feet x 100 feet.²² Reportedly, "a single unit could be erected by a team of 10 men in 300 man hours, weighed only 23, 381 pounds, and could be shipped in 23 crates."²³ Between 150,000 and 170,000 Quonset huts were built during World War II. Approximately 11,800 of those were the larger Utility Building-type. After the war, the U.S. military sold the surplus Quonset huts to the public for as little as $1,000.²⁴

The end of World War II and the unprecedented numbers of veterans returning to the Upper Cumberland area necessitated a new, permanent building to house American Legion Bohannon Post #4. The post purchased the property from Reagan in November 1949 and the surplus Quonset hut was to serve as the new home of American Legion Bohannon Post #4.

The new American Legion Bohannon Post #4 quickly became integrated into the community life of Livingston and the surrounding area. Soon after the building was completed, the regional library was moved there.²⁵ From 1950 until the early 1960s, the Livingston Public Library was located in the check room of the American Legion building.²⁶ This was among the first of many different community-oriented activities and services located or carried out in the building since it was first opened. From the early 1950s until the mid 1980s, the American Legion building was also used as a voting precinct.²⁷

In addition to the American Legion, the building also hosted various meetings and functions of local social organizations including the Ladies Auxiliary who continue to host meetings and events there.²⁸ Community events were held year-round in the building. These events included Boy Scout gatherings, various school functions and auctions, spelling bees, among others. But among the most popular events to be held in the American Legion building were square dances, which have been central to rural Appalachian folk culture since the 18th century. Square dances sponsored by various community organizations have long been popular in the Upper Cumberland region.²⁹ The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 has hosted many such sponsored dances through the years. Local bluegrass and folk bands have traditionally provided the music for the dances. Communities throughout the Appalachian uplands would compete for dancing championships, which helped create a sense of social cohesion and pride within the individual communities. The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 had its own square dancing team. In 1950, the team competed, along with the Alpine, Overton County band, Ferrell and Norris Brothers as musical accompanists, in the Nashville Banner All Free Square Dance Contest Finals at the old Sulphur Dell baseball park in Nashville.³⁰

The American Legion Bohannon Post #4 has become an integral part of the Livingston landscape. The building has a special place in the community, and represents the ideals and values of the county and region. The building has functioned as a focal point for Livingston and the surrounding area since the Bohannon Post acquired the property. The building has hosted many events through the years, and will host many more in the future. With the exception of the Overton County Courthouse, no other building in the Livingston area has been as central to the overall life of the community as has the American Legion Bohannon Post #4, a unique and invaluable community resource. The building itself retains its historic integrity as a modified military surplus Quonset hut. Its mid-20th century modifications reflect the various needs of the American Legion Bohannon Post #4 and that of the Livingston community as a whole.
