SIGNIFICANCE (Indicate sources of information for all statements)

20. Architectural Significance

- a. Key structure/individually may qualify for the National Register
- b. Contributing structure c. Not eligible/intrusion

This is a rather plain courthouse for its period. Chief features are the entrance porch, with round round arches on squat, medieval-looking columns; and brick wall dormers with triangular pediments and oculus windows. Note original oak staircase.

21. Historical Significance

Theme(s) Politics/Government

- a. Key structure/individually may qualify for the National Register
- b. Contributing structure c. Not eligible/intrusion

This courthouse is locally significant as the historical focus of county government, and of the political power and prestige derived from the community's status as the county seat. As center of county government, an Iowa town was reasonably assured of economic and population growth, and a prominent role in local social and political life. The county courthouse represents a significant public investment in a structure built not simply for utilitarian purposes, but also as a monument associated with the historical importance of county organization and development.

FREMONT COUNTY

On Iowa's southwestern extreme is Fremont County, organized in 1850. The first county seat was situated at Austin, a town which consisted of two houses, about 7½ miles south of the town of Sidney. Seated upon nail kegs or boxes, participants in the first sessions of court were hosted by A. H. Argyle in his storeroom in one of those two houses.

On May 10, 1851, the county seat was moved to Sidney, where a $40,000 courthouse was constructed in 1860. The brick building which was large for its time had a heavy brick tower and a tin roof which capped its second story. The construction was financed by the sale of swampland and was regarded by an 1875 history as one of the finest buildings in western Iowa. One winter day in 1863, a merchant reported that two and one-half kegs of gunpowder had been stolen. The whereabouts of these kegs was unknown until about nine o'clock on a November night. All the windows and doors in the courthouse were blown from the structure and the entire upper floor and roof were thrown out of place. The county spent a considerable amount of money to repair the damages, but the fissures left in the wall increased in size in the years which followed.

The present brick courthouse was built in 1889, as evidenced by the numerals affixed over the arch above the main entryway. The courthouse is relatively simple but full of character. Between short granite columns at the front of the building are cement steps that have become concave with wear from the many thousands of footsteps placed upon them over the past three-quarters of a century.
