DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

With massing and symmetry characteristic of the Queen Anne style and a construction date of 1893, this house would seem simple to categorize. There are, however, some variations on the theme, particularly in the manner of the exterior decoration. As previously mentioned, the house is vertically massed and has an irregular plan. In keeping with the Queen Anne tradition, exterior fabric varies from clapboard with corner boards to a variety of shingled patterns. The roof is a steep hip, gables are numerous and incorporate porches on consoles, balconies and overhangs into the total gable composition. A hexagonal turret with paired blind arches on each side at the third level, rises from the southeast corner of the building to give balance to the whole. The outline of the roof carries the eye from the tall turret to entrance gables to hipped roof to principal gable--a uniform and balanced whole.

The fine line of determining stylistic characteristics comes into focus with this house since the exterior ornament is not classical and small in scale as is typical of Queen Anne; rather it is large, curving and three-dimensional. Typical of Eastlake decoration, spindles, brackets, bargeboards, knobs and pendils are the "product of the chisel, the gouge, and the lathe" and are used in abundance. In addition, arches vary in shape from equilateral to ogee, and brackets vary in type from solid panels with etched sunburst patterns to perforated foliate and curlicue designs. Windows are double-hung sash throughout, with and without colored glass borders. A wide veranda defined by thick spindle posts and spindle-type balustrade surrounds the house on two sides. Entry to the porch is gained through a gabled opening which covers the porch stairs. The entrance is a single wood panelled door.

An off-center entrance leads directly into one of the two front parlors. Room arrangement is irregular and alterations to interior partitions have been few. The house is in excellent condition, both inside and out, with original roof cresting still intact. The house is an extremely fine example of late Victorian Queen Anne architecture, and research on other properties of similar style and vintage around the state indicates that this house may have been designed by George F. Barber. Barber practiced in Knoxville, Tennessee around the turn of the century and at the present time three of his designs in Florida have been located and documented.

In 1879, John Phillip Donnelly came to Florida from Pittsburg. As he was to relate in a speech many years later, "glorious Lake Dora" was the reason for his settling in this central part of the state. At that time, most of what is now Mt. Dora was a part of the Stone Homestead, owned and occupied by Annie Stone. Donnelly's homestead was approximately one mile north of the Stone Homestead. On August 18, 1881, the Stone-Donnelly marriage brought together the two real-estate fortunes that were to become most of the present town of Mt. Dora. By 1884, the town was platted and laid out, and Donnelly Avenue was to become one of the main thoroughfares. Credited as one of the founders of the town, Donnelly was active all of his life in community affairs. Twice mayor, he served on the Board of Directors for the Florida Chatauqua and donated land for the construction of the Congregational Church and the Town Hall. Donnelly sold the park (Annie E. Donnelly Park) to the city in 1924, and it is still the recreational center of the town today. At the time this Victorian house was built in 1893, it was doubtless the finest in the area.

J. P. Donnelly was one of a handfull of individuals responsible for the development of the central part of the state. He was personally responsible for construction of many of the downtown commercial buildings, platting of the town and its economic success. His house survives not only as a landmark in the county and a tribute to him, but as one of the finest Victorian residences remaining in the state.
