This structure has a Corinthian hexastyle portico which serves as the main entrance and a Corinthian di-style entrance on the eastern face of the building. The clock tower rises in three stages to a ribbed gold colored dome with clocks facing the 4 directions. Rectangular windows with emphasized keystones are on the front facade; square windows with plain stone lintels are on the sides and rear. A metal cornice encircles the building. The walls are 16" thick and the window sashes are 5-1/2' wide. There have been ^{several small} many additions to the building.

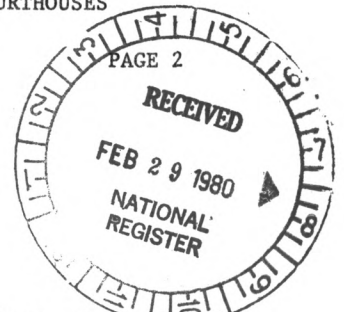

On the interior, the rotunda has been altered; the ceiling is acoustical tile. Marble was brought from the quarries at Tate, Ga. for the lobby floor. In the courtroom, the balcony has been closed. The judges bench is wooden and quite plain. All wood in the building - doors, bannisters, and trim - is solid oak with a dark stain.

see 7/21/80 info from state + map attached. map shows additions in cross hatch, state staff says.
