NATIONAL REGISTER CRITERIA STATEMENT (if applicable)

Part of a planned suburban development call Wakefield Park, this house represents perhaps the best example of the Shingle Style in Wakefield and features some interesting Colonial Revival detailing as well. The house retains integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling and association, and meets criterion C of the NRHP on the local level.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE Describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within the community.

This is perhaps the best example of the Shingle Style in Wakefield. It has a deep gable roof with a transverse gable above 1½ stories. The exterior of the house, in what may be called its original color scheme, is covered in shingles in various patterns from waves to sawtooth. Shingles now cover all the major architectural features, unlike the purely decorative use of shingles in the Queen Anne Style. Brackets, watertable, alike, are shingled. Twin entry columns, diamond sash and an ornament rail, unique in Wakefield, are Colonial Revival features often found in the Shingle Style.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE Explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community.

This house was designed and built by Robert Pote Wait, a partner in the firm of Pote & Cutter, Architects, of Boston, as his own residence in 1886-87. After his death, the house was purchased by Grace and Hubbard Mansfield in 1907. They, in turn, hired architect Charles R. Wait to modernize the house by adding a furnace, gas lighting and town water. Hubbard was an early town planner in Wakefield who was known to schedule time in the library every Wednesday night to study planning and discuss issues with Wakefield citizens. Grace Mansfield was a poet who established the Mansfield Class for Bible study at the Universalist Church. As early as 1855 plans were filed in Middlesex County Registry to develop the land southeast of Cowdrey's Hill. Wakefield was entering its phase of population expansion introduced by the coming of the railroad and the attraction of Wakefield as a residential community. By then 100 acres had been assembled for development as Wakefield Park. Promotional literature for the development pointed it out as a planned street layout which included this small Adams Street. The architectural achievement of this house and its upper middle class owners typify the expectations held for Wakefield Park and its residents.
