Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Central Berwyn Bungalow National Register Historic District is located in Berwyn, Illinois, and roughly bounded by Berwyn's main commercial corridor, Cermak Road, on the north; Home Avenue and J. Sterling Morton West High School to the west; 26th Street on the south; and Ridgeland Avenue to the east. Encompassing 236 acres divided into 56 blocks of mostly single family bungalows and two flat homes, the district was largely constructed from the 1910s to the 1940s, one of the more active periods of development for the City of Berwyn. Development within the district largely declined in the years after World War II when the last of bungalows and other building types were constructed on the remaining lots. Homes constructed after 1949, which consist mainly of Ranches and other two flats and apartment blocks are non-contributing to the district.

There are 1,507 principal buildings of which 1,358 are contributing; all principal buildings have historically been and currently are in residential use. With very few exceptions, all homes within the district include detached single and two-car garages located to the rear of the yard and facing the alleyway; on corner lots, garages face the street. The single family bungalow type accounts for 1,265 of the 1,507 principal buildings found within the district. Of the bungalow types, there are 1,109 masonry-constructed single family Chicago Bungalows, the dominant bungalow style found not only in Berwyn but also in several Chicago neighborhoods and inner-ring suburbs. Other bungalows were designed in the Romanesque Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, and styles popular during the same period. In addition, the district contains 105 two-flat homes, located predominately along the northern and southern blocks of Ridgeland, Elmwood, Gunderson, and Scoville Avenues; and 56 Gable-Front cottages and homes, which comprise the earliest housing types found in the district. There are also 11 apartment blocks exhibiting a diversity of styles from Tudor Revival to Art Moderne. Other buildings include school and religious buildings that were constructed as important neighborhood institutions during the time of the district's development.

The majority of principal buildings in the Central Berwyn Bungalow National Register Historic District retain their original appearance and the district has changed little in its resources, streetscape and overall visual appearance since its development during the 1920s. Chicago

Bungalow exteriors are not easily altered or modified given their mostly masonry construction; what changes or alterations are found include window replacements, masonry repointing and dormer additions and dormer material replacement on the side and rear elevations. In some cases, second story additions that significantly break above the roof ridgeline have taken place. These buildings are classified as non-contributing since such changes dramatically transformed the Chicago Bungalow's horizontal appearance and design emphasis. However, despite these changes, the resources of the district retain a high level of integrity and continue to convey their historic appearance.

Narrative Description

Resources within the district are found in the following table and are listed by address in the accompanying map.

Physical Setting and Historical Development

The Central Berwyn Bungalow National Register Historic District is located in Berwyn, Illinois, an inner-ring western suburb of Chicago incorporated in 1902. Before incorporation, Berwyn was part of Cicero Township, which once comprised the neighboring communities of Oak Park to the north and Cicero to the east. Before incorporation, Berwyn first developed from the 1850s to the 1890s as speculators began purchasing large tracts of the land in anticipation of railroad service and new settlers arriving in the region. Over time, major settlements would emerge, including LaVergne and Berwyn along the southern edge of Berwyn where a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad station would be established, and one on Berwyn's north side near Roosevelt Road (12th Street) to 16th Street. The land in the middle of these two main settlements between Cermak Road and 26th Street would later be developed during the 1900s to the 1940s as Berwyn's bungalow district for working class families and immigrants seeking new housing opportunities away from the crowded neighborhoods of adjacent Chicago.

The district contains a development pattern and housing type mix typical of many Chicago neighborhoods and inner-ring suburbs that were developed during the same time period. The development pattern follows a largely rectilinear street network and grid pattern that extends from Chicago and neighboring Cicero and Oak Park with the short block ends facing the east-west streets and the long blocks fronting the north-south streets. The district's street network also shares the same north-south, east-west street names with neighboring Cicero and Oak Park, including the main arterials of Cermak Road and 26th Street, and Oak Park, East and Ridgeland Avenues. This predominately rectangular block development pattern allowed for the construction of up to 34 single family and two flat homes per block on lots ranging in size from 4,000 to 5,500 square feet and serviced by alleyways. The heights of the district's principal buildings are generally one to two stories; garages and other secondary structures are mostly one story.

This rectilinear development pattern largely defines the district from east from Ridgeland Avenue west until Riverside Drive, which is the district's only diagonal street extending from Cermak Road to the north to 26th Street to the south. Riverside Drive served as an important parkway connecting Berwyn to the Olmsted and Vaux-designed suburb of Riverside to the southeast. It is along Riverside Drive that afforded opportunities for larger lots and yards than what was typically found elsewhere in the district; as a consequence, some of the district's larger and more elaborately designed bungalows are found here. At the corner of Riverside Drive and Oak Park Avenue, leftover land was reserved for the development of Mraz Park, named after a former mayor of Berwyn, Fred J. Mraz. Little is known of the bungalow architects and designers since permit information is unavailable; however, several developers, contractors and builders have been identified.

The district's streetscapes and public spaces remain largely intact and there have been no changes in street layout and configurations. The streetscape environment is intimate and typical of a traditional neighborhood developed in streetcar suburbs during the 1920s, 30s and 40s. Streets are not more than 40 feet in width and parkways and front setbacks have not been encroached. Mraz Park -- along with the lawn setbacks, parkways and the playground areas associated with three neighborhood schools -- comprise the district's only open space. The district is a distinct place of well-maintained and finely crafted homes.

Housing Types – Single Family Bungalow

Single family bungalows account for 1,265 of the 1,507 principal buildings found within the district; of these, 1,109 are single family Chicago Bungalows, stylistic type defined by its low-slung profile, face brick and masonry construction, stone trim, hipped roof shape, dormers, window combinations, flower box brackets below the first floor windows, and enclosed porch or portico entry and entry steps. Chicago Bungalows also are defined by the interior floor plan with the living and kitchen spaces on one side and the bedrooms and bathroom on the other. Chicago Bungalows are found on every block within the district with the more prevalent modest-sized bungalows located on the block interiors and the larger, more stylized ones, with face brick and stone trim on two elevations rather one, located on the larger, prime corner lots. An exception to this development pattern occurred along Riverside Drive, where larger lots and the location along Berwyn's most prominent parkway, provided the opportunity for more elaborately-designed bungalows with tile roofs, elaborate trim work, side gables, curved front bays and other stylistic elements from the Craftsman and Italian Renaissance styles. Aside from the Chicago Bungalow, other bungalow styles found within the district include Prairie, Colonial, Craftsman, Tudor and Romanesque Revival, the latter two comprising 114 of the 1,265 single family bungalows. Romanesque Revival bungalows incorporate simpler and spare Romanesque Revival detailing with flat fronts, stone lintels and stepped parapets and were generally constructed in the district from the late 1910s and early 1920s. In contrast, the Tudor Revival bungalows, often distinguished by their extend gable forms over the front entrance, were constructed during the 1930s and 1940s on the last remaining lots. Colonial Revival bungalows feature a slightly projecting front bay topped with a fanlight window.

In general, the single family bungalows within the district retain excellent integrity and alterations are generally limited to window replacements, enclosure of front porch spaces and dormers to their side elevations. In some cases, dormer and second floor additions that significantly altered the bungalow's original roof line were classified as non-contributing buildings as they dramatically transformed a bungalow's horizontal and low-slung appearance. Romanesque Revival bungalows were rarely altered. However, garages, the district's secondary structures were often altered through re-facing in vinyl, aluminum or other materials. Some original garages have been replaced. Of the district's 1374 documented garages, only 557 are contributing; another 817 are considered non-contributing from alterations or from replacement construction. Some garages have been lost to demolition. The majority of garages were constructed for single cars, although corner lot homes often included garages that were of more substantial construction with face brick and stone detailing, dormers, and clay tiles along the garage roof parapet.

Apart from the single family bungalows, vernacular Gable-Front houses and cottages can be found along the edges of the district and along certain lots within a block's interior. These homes comprise the earliest homes within the district, built mainly in the 1910s, and often exhibit plain fronts constructed in wood and masonry, concrete block or stone foundations, and half or full-width porch entries. In many instances, these homes were altered with new siding, porches and additions. Due to these alterations, Gable-Front houses and cottages were often not assigned an architectural style; however, several masonry-constructed Gable-Fronts retain a high level of integrity. In addition to the Gable-Fronts, a handful of Colonial and Tudor Revival two-story homes also exist in the District, as well as 38 Ranch and Minimal Traditional homes constructed during the 1950s, outside the district's period of significance.

Housing Types – Two Flats and Multi-Family

The blocks from Scoville to Ridgeland Avenues and between 23rd Street and Cermak Road contain the highest concentration of the district's two-flats, mostly constructed during the 1920s. This location took advantage of the nearby commercial services and transit access along Cermak Road and its interurban transportation lines to the City of Chicago, nearby employment centers and other destinations in adjacent suburbs. Two flats can be found in other locations throughout the district on interior lots that were not developed for single family use. The majority of the Two Flats were constructed in the Romanesque Revival variant found in the single family bungalows; other Two Flats were designed with Chicago Bungalow stylistic characteristics with patterned-face brick, bow, octagon or polygonal windows bays, stone trim, flower box brackets and art glass windows, similar to the single family bungalow building type. The district's two flats retain a high level of integrity and were rarely, if ever, altered given their brick masonry construction. What alterations did take place were often the enclosures of rear stairways to provide additional space for both first and second floor residences. Only 63 of the 105 Two Flat homes have contributing garages.

Other multi-family building types include 11 apartment blocks of four units or more that are dispersed throughout the district and constructed mainly during the 1920s and 30s and those after the 1950s, beyond the district's period of significance. The contributing apartment blocks were designed in the Tudor Revival and Art Moderne styles.

Other Building Types

The district contains three schools, including Hiawatha School at 6539 26th Street and constructed in the Classical Revival Style in 1912 and the St. Odilo Church and School at 6617 23rd Street, designed in an Italian Renaissance Style. Piper School at 2449 Kenilworth Avenue was designed by architect George W. Ashby of Ashby, Ashby and Schultze in a refined Craftsman style. Of the district’s churches, the second St. Odilo Church at 2300 East Avenue, constructed in 1962 in a Mid-Century Modern style is non-contributing to the district. Constructed in 1954, the Trinity Community Church at 7022 Riverside Drive, designed by William R. and Ernest J. Kramer, is a more traditional expression of Tudor Revival; the Ukrainian Baptist Church to the northeast at 6751 Riverside Drive is a modern interpretation of the same style. Both are non-contributing to the district.

The following inventory of buildings within the district have been documented according to their overall building type and architectural style. In some cases, a principal building’s architectural style or specific building type was identified. Those fields are left blank. There were eight secondary buildings in the survey that needed further investigation to determine whether they were old enough or possessed enough integrity. These have been listed as noncontributing but have been identified with an asterisk in the event that evidence comes forth to change their classification.

The Central Berwyn Bungalow Historic District is locally significant under Criterion C as a cohesive neighborhood of Chicago Bungalows and other housing types and styles typically found in the residential neighborhoods of Chicago and its inner-ring suburbs. Its period of significance begins in 1900, when many of the first homes were built, until 1949, when the last Chicago Bungalow-styled homes and other bungalow types were last constructed. While most homes in the district are the typical Chicago Bungalow constructed for working and middle class homeowners, there are many “higher-end” homes along Riverside Drive that are exceptional examples of the Chicago Bungalow and other architectural styles of the early 20th century. The district was largely constructed during the mid-1920s for a number of ethnic groups, most especially Czech immigrants and the first generations of Czech-Americans moving west from Chicago and Cicero neighborhoods along the 22nd Street (Cermak Road) commercial corridor. Cermak Road was originally known as 22nd Street when it was named after Anton Cermak, the first Czech mayor of the City of Chicago. Overall, the district has excellent integrity and cohesiveness.

The Chicago Bungalow is a house type that developed in Chicago and the Great Lakes region. Based on the one story bungalow that became popular in many cities at the turn of the 20th century, the Chicago Bungalow was adapted to fit the regional conditions of site, climate, local building codes and available building materials. Chicago Bungalows are of brick construction, with hipped roofs, rectangular in form and built on narrow urban lots. Within the general Chicago Bungalow building type, however, there are numerous style and subtype variations that are represented in the district, making it perhaps one of the most comprehensive collections of Chicago Bungalow subtypes within the Chicago region.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

This narrative encompasses the historical development of Berwyn, the growth and development of the district in particular, and the district’s bungalow types and architectural styles.

The Development of Berwyn

The City of Berwyn is located less than two miles west of Chicago’s municipal boundaries and eight miles southwest of the Loop. The land encompassing Berwyn was once swampland used by the Potawatomie Indians for hunting grounds and as a portage between the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers. When the Illinois-Michigan Canal was built just to the south in the 1830s and ‘40s, European settlers began to clear the land of what is now the southern portions of Berwyn.¹ Theodore Doty purchased a large tract of land in 1846 from the Canal Commission and built a plank road along a portage trail that is now Ogden Avenue, one of Berwyn’s major thoroughfares.² The Canal, completed in 1848, and the plank road that connected the fledgling town of Chicago with Ottawa, 80 miles to the southeast at the confluence of the Fox and Illinois

Rivers, provided access through Berwyn that in turn attracted more settlers and land speculators in succeeding decades.

One such speculator was Thomas Baldwin, who purchased a large tract of land in south Berwyn in 1856. Baldwin settled there and eventually subdivided his land and named it LaVergne in 1880.³ The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad (CB&Q) passed its line through the area in 1864 but LaVergne would not become a flag station until the 1870s. Consequently, the area remained rather isolated.⁴ In the 1870s and '80s, most of the swampy land was drained and settlement increased with a more permanent railroad depot built at Ridgeland Avenue in 1886.⁵ The 1880s saw modest growth of the new community, including the construction of a stone school.⁶

In 1890, another large tract of land was purchased by Charles E. Piper and Wilbur J. Andrews. Piper and Andrews aggressively subdivided and marketed their holdings and named their new community Berwyn, after the Philadelphia suburb served by the Pennsylvania Railroad.⁷ Supposedly, the name was chosen by one of Berwyn's founders from the Pennsylvania Railroad timetable.⁸ The new settlement and CB&Q station was located halfway between Ridgeland and Harlem Avenues and experienced steady growth in the 1890s.

Around the same time period, another settlement was developing at the north end of present day Berwyn, just south of Roosevelt Road (12th Street), the present-day border between Berwyn and Oak Park. The Village of Oak Park was well established a mile north of Roosevelt Road and the settlement was commonly known at the time as South Oak Park. The settlement extended south from Roosevelt to 16th Street and given its proximity to Oak Park, residents were accustomed to using the Oak Park post office and sending their children to Oak Park schools.⁹ The land between the two settlements, the area where the present district is located, remained mostly open and sparsely settled for decades.

Berwyn was incorporated as a village in 1902 after a vote to separate from Cicero Township. In 1908, the village was incorporated as a city. The new boundaries encompassed both the north and south settlements and extended from Roosevelt Road as its northern boundary to Pershing Road to the south. Berwyn shares its eastern boundary with the Town of Cicero at Lombard Avenue; Harlem Avenue is Berwyn's western boundary. Berwyn continued to experience significant population growth after its incorporation, although it remained focused in the far northern and southern portions of the city.

It was the construction and extension of streetcar lines during the 1890s and afterward that opened up other areas of the city to development, making Berwyn a more attractive residential suburb given its proximity to employment centers in Cicero, Chicago and other nearby communities. The first streetcar line opened by the Suburban Railroad Company in 1896 and mostly served the neighborhoods near the CB&Q Railroad.¹⁰ An extension of the line north along Harlem Avenue was planned, and would have connected central Berwyn to the CB&Q and the Village of Oak Park. However, the land around Harlem and Cermak was a tree farm owned by the City of Chicago, which supplied its park trees. Chicago refused to provide an easement at the time and the line was not extended.¹¹

The City of Berwyn experienced rapid growth after the turn of the 20th Century and into the 1910s and '20s. In 1910, the population was 5,841. By 1920, Berwyn had grown to 14,150.¹² Most of this growth, however, was still focused in Berwyn's original southern and northern settlements. Central Berwyn, with Cermak Road as its main transportation arterial, remained relatively undeveloped.

A number of factors brought rapid development to this area during the 1920s. First was transportation access: "Good public transportation figured strongly in Berwyn's development."¹³ While streetcars and the CB&Q Railroad served residents in southern Berwyn, it took years before adequate road and transit service facilitated development in central Berwyn. Starting in 1895, the Suburban Railroad had an interurban railway line along 22nd Street running from Chicago through Cicero, Berwyn, and Riverside and to Brookfield Zoo and LaGrange.¹⁴ As an interurban line however, it made few stops. Charles Yerkes, developer of many Chicago elevated lines, took over ownership of the line in 1897. However, Yerkes' operation did not build a transit connection to central Berwyn, rather it only offered transit services serving the communities west of Berwyn from his Lake Street Elevated Line located further north in Oak Park.

Another transit line, the grade-level Douglas Branch of the Metropolitan West Side line, began providing service along 22nd Street (Cermak Road), passing through the Chicago neighborhoods of Pilsen, Douglas Park, Little Village and Lawndale.¹⁵ Eventually it extended all the way to 54th Avenue in Cicero, but that was still more than a mile from Berwyn's eastern border. Competition between rival transit lines meant that the Yerkes-owned Suburban Railroad did not connect to the Metropolitan West Side line; instead, it consisted of the Lake Street Elevated in Oak Park.¹⁶ In 1913, the various interurban and street car lines extending from Chicago into the growing inner-ring suburbs were merged into the Chicago and West Towns Railways. Over the next decade, service improved along 22nd Street and the various systems became more connected and integrated. In the 1920s, the Metropolitan West Side line was extended westward at grade along 22nd Street and reached Oak Park Avenue in Berwyn by 1924.¹⁷ With completion of the line, it provided a simple connection and direct link to the industrial centers in neighboring Cicero and western Chicago as well as the commercial and cultural activities concentrated in the Loop. In turn, the Metropolitan West Side line extension not only served as a key transportation connection between Berwyn and destinations east, it also spurred the commercial expansion of 22nd Street and new residential development south of 22nd Street in the largely vacant areas between the north side of Berwyn and its southern settlements.

The transit line extensions that occurred during the first two decades of the 20th century also facilitated the movement of population groups from Chicago neighborhoods, including Pilsen and Lawndale, west into the inner-ring western suburbs where larger homes on bigger lots offered opportunities for a more middle class lifestyle. Pilsen, in particular, consisted of Bohemian immigrants since a major immigration influx occurred in Chicago during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. At the time, the Czech region in Europe known as Bohemia was under the rule of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and many Czechs left for the New World to avoid military service and improve their economic fortunes. In addition, immigration policies in the United States eased and the rapidly growing industrial centers in Chicago provided abundant opportunities for Bohemian workers, especially those that were skilled in metalworking and building construction.¹⁸ After the 1871 Chicago Fire, Bohemian immigrants settled in the neighborhood southwest of the Loop, near 18th Street and Blue Island Avenue, what would be soon named as Pilsen after the City of Pilzen in western Bohemia.¹⁹ As the population grew and prospered, the Czechs moved further west along 22nd and 26th Streets into what are now known as the Douglas Park (then called Czech California) and Lawndale neighborhoods.²⁰ These areas developed mostly in the early 20th Century through World War I and became the core of what is known as Chicago's Bungalow Belt.

As many of the Czech residents prospered in succeeding decades, they, like other ethnic and population groups, began to move to other neighborhoods and communities in the search for better housing and employment opportunities. Czech migration in Chicago occurred along the 22nd and 26th Street commercial corridor spines and the Metropolitan Elevated line through Douglas Park, Lawndale and then to the suburb of Cicero, where the Western Electric

Hawthorne Works was the major employer in the area at the time. After 1920, another round of western migration pushed Czech residents into central Berwyn, which led to Berwyn's building boom and general prosperity of the 1920s. By 1930, the City's population had reached 47,027, three times its size in 1920.²¹

Berwyn developed primarily as a residential suburb during the first two decades of the 20th century and allowed very few industrial developments as opposed to neighboring Cicero. In 1904, Village President Charles Little described Berwyn as "a community of houses and green lawns."²² In fact, the official motto of Berwyn is "City of Homes." However, while the CB&Q Railroad allowed convenient access to the offices in the Loop for residents of southern Berwyn, central Berwyn relied on streetcar access to industries located in Chicago Lawndale and Cicero, including the Western Electric Hawthorne Works Plant located at Cermak Road and Cicero Avenue.²³ The plant, started in 1903, was a subsidiary of Bell Telephone and manufactured all of the system's telephones. Another Cicero industry was the Grant Locomotive Works established in 1892. The Lawndale neighborhood was home to Sears Roebuck and Company and International Harvester.²⁴ Hotpoint and Sunbeam also had major plants in Cicero.²⁵ These industries were substantial operations that employed tens of thousands of workers, many of them Czechs. Hawthorne Works alone had over 20,000 workers by 1920, providing many Czechs and other immigrants good pay and steady work.^{26, 27} According to Cohn, "the machinists, tool makers and masons who moved to Berwyn had reached the top rung of the blue collar pay scale, and the reward was the opportunity to buy a new home."²⁸ It is estimated that between nine to 12 percent of the workers in Cicero lived in Berwyn during the 1920s.²⁹ During Berwyn's building boom of the 1920s, it is estimated that a third of the new residents were coming from the west side neighborhoods of Chicago. And most of those migrants were Czech. About 15 percent of Berwyn residents in 1920 were of Czech birth. In 1930, the percentage of residents with Czech birth or heritage was 25 percent.³⁰ Frank Janda was elected Mayor in 1925, the first Czech to be mayor and a symbol of the growing power of this ethnic group in Berwyn.

During the early part of the 20th century, Cermak Road developed as Berwyn's main commercial corridor serving the growing residential neighborhoods to the south and transportation artery that linked Berwyn residents to Cicero and Chicago. The area along Cermak Road saw rapid development starting around 1920. The first major developer was Walter G. McIntosh. His realty firm subdivided a 40-block parcel at the east end and north of Cermak Road.³¹ Joseph Cermak and Richard Novotny created the Berwyn Manor Subdivision in 1921 and consisted of 16 blocks north of Cermak Road. Berwyn Gardens, another 16-block subdivision at the west end of Berwyn, was developed by James Ladas in 1923.³²

Commercial development along Cermak Road followed the residential growth in the early 1920s. Much of eastern Cermak Road was built up before 1925 while the western end was built from the mid-1920s through the 1950s. The vast majority of buildings dating from the 1910s and '20s are found between Lombard and Ridgeland Avenues.³³ Cermak Road became known in the 1920s as the "Bohemian Wall Street" for its association with banks and businesses run by and serving the Czech community, especially for home mortgages.³⁴

Development of the District

According to an article in the Berwyn Beacon, the area encompassing the district started developing in 1921, making it one of the last areas in Berwyn to see new growth.³⁵ (Figure 1) The majority of homes in the district date from the mid-1920s, although there are numerous homes scattered throughout the district dating between 1900 and 1920, including many Gable-Front cottages and homes. The district's building boom in Berwyn peaked in 1927.

One of the earliest Czech developments in Berwyn occurred near the intersection of Ridgeland Avenue and 26th Street in the early 20th century.³⁶ While a significant amount of residential construction occurred south of 26th Street and outside of the present district during this time period, some of the earliest homes in the district are located near 26th and Ridgeland, especially in the 2500 blocks of Gunderson and Scoville Avenues. Joseph Donat had a four-block subdivision along the north side of 26th Street extending between Ridgeland to East Avenues.³⁷ Since it was one of the first blocks to be developed in the district, a small commercial district emerged along 26th Street near the present-day Hiawatha School (6539 26th Street), first built in 1912. Two other district subdivisions were developed before 1913. Groh & Christian's subdivision consists of an eight-block neighborhood bordered by Ridgeland and East Avenues, Cermak Road and 24th Street.³⁸ The other subdivision was developed by Gustav Klima, encompassing the blocks south of Cermak Road between Wesley and Oak Park Avenues.³⁹ However, even these early subdivisions were not fully built out until the mid-1920s.

New institutional buildings were also constructed during this time period. Hiawatha School was first constructed in 1912 at East Avenue and 26th Street. It also served neighborhoods south and east of the district. The school was expanded in 1928, during the peak building boom. Charles Piper School, at the west end of the district on Kenilworth Avenue was built in 1926 with an addition in 1928. St. Odilo Church and School was built at 23rd and Clarence Avenue in 1928 to serve the rapidly growing community.

Developers like Cermak and Novotny obtained financing from Czech-run banks and building and loans and sold lots to builders and contractors and to individual lot owners. As they gained an investment return, developers purchased more land, which in turn, fed the profits and growth of local financial institutions by providing mortgages to new homeowners. While most of these financial institutions were originally located in Chicago and Cicero, the housing growth in Berwyn enticed new banks to open along Cermak Road, the most prominent of these being the American State Bank.⁴⁰

The American State Bank was founded as the Twenty-Second Street State Bank in 1921 by Frank Topinka. Topinka was also in the real estate business and profited both by selling land and financing developers and homebuyers. Topinka was noted as saying, "We are told that every president of the Chicago banks has had his start in banking as a real estate broker. In time the broker, if his venture proved successful, branched out as a private banker."⁴¹ In 1925, at the height of the building boom in central Berwyn, Topinka built a new bank building at the southwest corner of Cermak Road and Oak Park Avenue and renamed it the American State Bank. The building was the largest structure at the west end of Cermak and anchored a thriving commercial corridor adjacent to the district.⁴²

Four other banks operated along Cermak Road in the 1920s.⁴³ The Ridgeland State Bank was constructed at the southwest corner of Ridgeland Avenue and 26th Street in 1925 just outside the district's boundaries.⁴⁴ Another bank that opened during this time period was the Berwyn Trust

Savings Bank. An announcement of its opening in the local Czech-language paper claimed the following:

Proof of the growth and development of any community is the establishment of banking institutions within it. Therefore, the recent organization of a new Czech banking institution in Berwyn, Illinois, furnishes such proof.⁴⁵

The significance of Czech-run banks and building and loans cannot be understated for the development of Czech neighborhoods in Chicago and the near suburbs. In 1920, there were 128 Czech-run building and loans in Chicago with assets of almost $14 million.⁴⁶ It should also be noted that Illinois banking laws mandated that building and loan proceeds be used only for construction loans and mortgages; therefore, their assets were derived directly from housing and building construction in Czech communities. According to a publication by an association of Czech bankers, "If the saying, 'the American home is the safeguard of American liberties,' means what it implies, the Building and Loan Associations have shown themselves a more potent factor in Americanization than any other single agency, for through them thousands of wage earners were enabled to build or purchase their homes."⁴⁷ (Figure 2)

One noted early developer in the district was Gustav Klima, a Czech immigrant who arrived in the United States in 1889. He first worked as a mechanic but by 1901 he had founded the Bohemian Plate Glass Insurance Association.⁴⁸ In 1906, he became Secretary of the Bohemian Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and by 1913, he had purchased a large tract of land in the district, bordered on the north by Cermak Road, Wesley Avenue on the east, Oak Park Avenue to the west and 24th Street on the south. While not a large tract of land, it is located in the center of the district and includes the east end of Riverside Drive. By 1920 there were several homes built along Riverside Drive and on Euclid Avenue. Klima himself lived in a two-story brick home at 6723 Riverside Drive and likely built by neighbor Richard Dusil (6714 Riverside Drive). Many of the early residents were tailors and machinists, skilled laborers who would form the working class backbone of the neighborhood.⁴⁹ A 1917 article on Klima described him as "one of the best known and most popular men in our (Czech) community."⁵⁰ The same article noted that "he became active in the real estate business and sold property in the neighborhood of Riverside Drive, 22nd Street and Oak Park Avenue. He transformed this section of Berwyn into a residential district for his Czech fellow countrymen."

Henry Groh, another early developer in the district, maintained a home and business in the 6400 block of Cermak Road in the 1910s and '20s. It appears he focused his business solely on real estate and also served as Collector for Berwyn from 1918 to 1922.⁵¹ Groh partnered with a man named Christian to develop a large tract of land at the northeast corner of the district.⁵² Many of the district's earliest bungalows were built in the Groh & Christian Subdivision during the late 1910s.

Although building permits for the district are not available, building dates determined through tax assessor records indicate the majority of the district's buildings were constructed during the mid to late 1920s. In 1925, the value of construction in Berwyn was estimated at just under $10 million, a 14 percent increase from 1924, which had a 15 percent increase from 1923.⁵³ The American State Bank is estimated to have financed $2 million of the construction during this time period.⁵⁴ In addition, while most of the district was built prior to 1930, scattered lots and other pockets of available land developed after the onset of the Great Depression. Rows of new housing dating from the 1930s and early '40s, as well as individual infill lot construction, can be found throughout the district. That construction continued during the Depression is evidence that employment in local industries remained constant and that families continued to locate to Berwyn for its neighborhoods, housing and other amenities. This development occurred despite the failure of every one of Berwyn's banks, including the American State Bank.

Tax assessor records indicate that several homes in the district were built during World War II. In general, residential construction came to a halt during the war to conserve materials and fuel for the war effort. Many workers also left to join the military. Exceptions were made for housing workers in war-related industries essential to the war effort. Given the significant industries located around Berwyn, including a torpedo plant to the north in Oak Park, it is possible that new worker housing was built in the district.

After World War II, housing construction began to resume. Various scattered lots throughout the district began to be filled with new homes by 1947. In the late 1940s, most of the homes built were of similar construction and style as the pre-War homes. However, by 1950, a significant stylistic shift had occurred in housing construction. Almost all new homes built from 1950 were raised ranches with a Minimal Traditional or Mid-Century Modern treatments. Split-level and ranch homes can be found along the larger lots of Riverside Drive and on corner lots. This fundamental shift in construction represented the end of the bungalow movement in the district.

Within the Chicago metropolitan region, it is estimated that perhaps as many as 100,000 Chicago Bungalows were built in the City of Chicago alone.⁵⁵ Within the district, the Chicago Bungalow is the dominate bungalow type. The bungalow's origins come from India; in fact, the name derives from the Indian cottage known as the "bangla" or "bangalo."⁵⁶ In India, the bungalow referred to a temporary structure surrounded by a veranda to allow for adequate air circulation. It was brought to the Western world by English colonists and eventually found its way to the United States. The earliest American bungalows were summer homes along the eastern seaboard in the late 19th century. After 1900, the bungalow transformed into a permanent home for middle and working-class families.⁵⁷ In that regard, its origins as an economical means of single-family housing were in California, but it quickly spread nationwide.

Writing in 1923, Chicago architect Charles E. White Jr. summarized the acceptance of the bungalow as an American housing form:

The bungalow was accepted in American as an ideal. Beginning in a small way it gathered impetus to itself and quickly swept the country. For several years now the bungalow has held a high place in esteem of the public. It seems that these little dwellings have come to stay and one may safely say now that the bungalow of the early days has developed into a really sensible type of domestic architecture, suitable to American living conditions and entirely desirable from the standpoint of architectural design, family comfort and structural endurance.⁵⁸

The popularity of the bungalow coincided with a dramatic population boom and urban expansion in the early 20th century. The Industrial Revolution of the late 19th century had brought millions of domestic migrants and foreign immigrants to American cities, but that resulted in high densities and overcrowded tenements. Pollution from the factories contributed to disease and social problems that came with overcrowding. Courtyard apartment blocks and two-flats provided some relief from the tenement conditions, but as many workers gained financial stability and rose up the economic ladder, they took the opportunity to buy single-family homes in newly developing neighborhoods and nearby streetcar suburbs. The bungalow was a perfect solution of economical housing for these homebuyers.

By definition, a bungalow is a one or one-and-a-half story home. It is a compact plan, typically with a formal living room, a dining room, kitchen, bathroom and one to three bedrooms all on the main level. Efficiency of space is paramount; consequently, public rooms tend to open to each other with no hallway. Bedrooms are often set apart for privacy, and might be served by a short hall or vestibule that also served the bathroom. Built-ins, such as linen cabinets, china sideboards and even seating are very common as a way to save space and reduce a homeowner's cost of furnishing. A low attic space might provide future expansion for bedrooms and typically has one or more dormer windows for light and vent. In a northern climate like Chicago, the bungalow is set over a full basement since foundation walls need to extend several feet below grade. Most Chicago-area basements are raised, which means that half the space is below grade and half above. These are often referred to as an English basement or raised basement. The basements also provide necessary utility space and desired laundry facilities.

The popularity of the bungalow movement coincided with an interest in providing plenty of natural light and ventilation. Because many urban neighborhoods built in the late 19th century tended to be overcrowded and polluted, early 20th century homebuyers wanted houses set within open landscapes and an openness to allow daylight and fresh air. Front yard setbacks allowed for a park-like setting along the street and rear lots allowed for privacy, garages and/or gardens. The early California and Craftsman style bungalows achieved these goals by being set on wide lots with large open porches and banks of windows. Such bungalows were heavily promoted by popular magazines like Ladies Home Journal and The Craftsman, as well as house plan books from companies like the Radford Architectural Company.⁵⁹

While variations of the bungalow type developed all over the country, Chicago saw a unique type of bungalow emerge after about 1910. It was based on several factors. First, building codes developed after the Great Fire of 1871 required exterior construction to be masonry. As noted by Bluestone, "As the city expanded so did the fire limits and huge swaths of outlying residential land were basically limited to brick and stone construction."⁶⁰ While wood clapboard and stucco-clad bungalows dominated elsewhere, Chicago builders turned to brick to meet the code and because brick was so readily available due to the rich clay deposits in the region. To save costs, most builders used the more expensive face brick on the front elevation only and a cheaper common brick on side and rear walls. Common brick was not as smooth or finished and was typically used for interior walls never intended to be seen. But with tight lots, it was hard to see the common brick side walls anyway. With the face brick however, many builders provided colorful bricks or bricks with rich textures and patterns. Adding stone or terra cotta details provided some distinction between homes.⁶¹

The urban nature of Chicago development led to a second characteristic of the Chicago Bungalow: a long rectangle with the narrow end facing the street. (Figure 3) Most Chicago city lots developed in the 1910s and '20s were only about thirty feet wide. This allowed adequate light and ventilation compared to the compact inner city tenements, but was still compact enough to maintain higher densities needed in the city. As a result of the narrow lots, most Chicago Bungalows were only about 25 feet wide. The remainder of the site was just a narrow walkway to access the rear. Garbage services and automobile access were provided by rear alleys. The narrow parcels and homes resulted in most Chicago Bungalows having hipped roofs which allowed more light to filter into the narrow gangways between homes. Dormer windows provided light and ventilation to attic spaces.⁶² According to Bluestone, "Part of the achievement of Chicago builders, architects, and residents came in their reworking of a house form initially envisioned for country living in the context of Chicago's street grid and narrower residential lots."⁶³

Light and ventilation were another key element of Chicago Bungalows and of the bungalow movement in general. The purported health benefits of clean air and sunlight were widely touted in the early 20th century. But with narrow lots, Chicago architects and builders evolved unique forms to achieve those goals. Like their California predecessors, many had open porches across the front side. (Figure 4) But open porches could not be used for much of the year in Chicago, so enclosed sun porches, or three-season porches were developed. These sun porches were enclosed with bands of casement windows that could be closed off in inclement weather but thrown open when temperatures allowed. When lots were deep enough, the sun porch could be extended out from the face of the home.⁶⁴ Most of these extended sun porches were clipped at the corners to allow light to filter between the houses, creating polygonal window bays. If the polygonal bay extends far enough out, the house is known as an "Octagon Bungalow." (Figure 5) Octagon Bungalow front bays are rarely considered sun porches or a modest extension of the living room; the front bays typically become part of the living room itself. With these extended bays, entries were pushed to the far side corner of the house, often with only a small portico to provide shelter from the elements. The large bands of windows found along these window bays also flooded the interior with plenty of natural light, a necessity with narrow lots. These porch and bay windows were often highly decorative with leaded art glass inspired by earlier Prairie style art glass. The art glass was mass produced, which lowered costs, but still provided a unique distinction between otherwise monotonous rows of homes.⁶⁵

The Chicago Bungalow could be rather plain on the exterior, but often had some stylistic and decorative elements. As noted, stone or terra cotta details could be added to porch piers, around windows or at entries to provide some decorative relief. These elements were mass produced but could be affordably purchased with stylistic ornamentation. Often it was only these elements that provided any stylistic features on the exterior. Rarely were Chicago Bungalows designed or built in a "high-style" manner. However, the decorative elements might provide a Craftsman, Prairie or Colonial Revival style to the home. (Figure 6) Some terra cotta elements were even fabricated with a Sullivanesque ornamentation.

Some Chicago Bungalows were built with more specific stylistic elements and character. Brackets under eaves, half-timbered gables and battered piers could provide a distinct Craftsman character to a home. Geometric ornamentation combined with a band of decorative art glass windows could provide a strong Prairie style character. An open front porch with classical columns, a Gambrel roof or a Palladian dormer window offered a distinct Colonial Revival character. In Berwyn, some Chicago Bungalows featured flat roofs with front parapet walls that gave a slight Romanesque Revival character. Although few highly stylized or eclectic bungalows can be described as "high-style," they nonetheless represented an opportunity for the middle class and blue collar homeowner to buy a home with the stylistic character found in more expensive suburban homes.

Although bungalows are by definition less than two stories, the same characteristics that made the Chicago Bungalow so popular could be extrapolated into larger buildings. Two-flats and three-flats were often built as Chicago style bungalows with an extra floor or two.⁶⁶ Many even featured the front sun porch. Several examples are found in the district. Larger two-story homes were usually set on larger lots, and so the narrow width was not a factor. But there are examples of two-story homes in the district that maintain many of the material and stylistic characteristics of the Chicago style bungalows. Most are found along Riverside Drive.

Chicago Bungalow interiors represent influences of the Arts and Crafts Movement as well as practical considerations for living in small houses. Because bungalows were compact, builders added built-in furnishings to save space. Such built-ins might include a window seat bench, a dining room sideboard, linen closet and ironing board. Bedrooms typically featured a separate closet, which was a newer innovation in domestic storage. An entry vestibule might also feature a coat closet. Bungalow kitchens had the latest amenities for housewives: built-in cabinets, porcelain sinks and a built-in oven/range. There was often space in the kitchen for a small, informal family dining table since bungalow families rarely had their own servants. It was anticipated that housewives would spend considerable time in their kitchens and so they were provided with as many luxuries as possible. Bathrooms also had modern conveniences and emphasized sanitary conditions. Floors and walls were easy-to-clean tile. Toilets, sinks and tubs were porcelain. Before the late 1920s, most bathrooms were mostly white to reflect how clean they were.⁶⁷

Interiors often featured stained woodwork. Built-ins, wood base and ceiling coves were high-grade wood meant to be stained. Some homes featured additional trim like picture or plate rails. The woodwork, however, was rarely decorated. Few bungalows featured dentil moldings or elaborate carvings. Simple woodwork was cheaper and reflected the simplified Arts and Crafts aesthetic.⁶⁸

By the 1920s, many middle-class families were able to buy an automobile and a detached garage was an integral component of a bungalow site. Garages were typically accessed from the alley in the district, although there are a few properties with driveways. Various Czech publications promoted the ability to have private garages for Berwyn bungalows and having an automobile provided not only transportation options, but status.⁶⁹ (Figure 7) While some of the garages in the district are of brick construction, most are inexpensive wood frame structures.

The Chicago Bungalow and Sub Types in the District

The Central Berwyn Bungalow Historic District contains almost every documented sub-type of the Chicago style bungalow. The basic definition of a Chicago Bungalow is well established. It is one or one-and-one-half stories tall, often with a raised basement. It is rectangular in form with the short end facing the street. Due to Chicago building codes that mandated brick construction after the Chicago Fire of 1871, Chicago Bungalows are almost always clad in solid brick masonry. The roof is often low-hipped with a front dormer for lighting and ventilating the attic, but front-facing gable roofs are not uncommon. If there is not an open porch, the entry is usually protected from the elements by a small portico or inset niche. All living spaces are found on the main floor level with the possibility of having some bedrooms in the attic space and a finished basement. Chicago Bungalows have at least one full bathroom and a kitchen. Modern plumbing, electricity and heating are essential. Like all bungalows, light and ventilation is critical and in Chicago Bungalows this is achieved with bands of windows along the front elevation and banks of windows in the dining room. Front windows are sometimes glazed with decorative, leaded art glass. The house is set on its lot with a front yard setback consistent along the block, a generous rear yard and walkways between houses.

Within the basic form and layout of a Chicago Bungalow, numerous variations have been identified and documented. Many of these sub-types are well defined in the Chicago Bungalows Multiple Properties National Register Nomination, prepared by Daniel Bluestone et al and accepted in 2004. Bluestone categorizes the sub-types by characteristics of the main entry, porch/bay and roofline. Within these three elements, a builder or designer could modify the public face of a bungalow in countless ways (there are over 40 unique combinations documented in the district). Doing so would break up the monotony of repetitive houses and provide owners with a more personalized home. As described by Bluestone, "Bungalow design and bungalow building diffused not through some central clearinghouse but rather through a process of constant experiment, honed and sharpened by the housing market, and refined by literally thousands of small builders and architects. Builders continually sought to attract homebuyers and in doing so they tried to meet and lead the market with slightly different variations of bungalows that already existed."⁷⁰ And while the Chicago style bungalow developed in the City of Chicago in the 1910s, it became a popular bungalow type throughout the region and even in cities and towns across the country. As it grew beyond the city's borders, further variations were devised to account for local conditions and preferences.

Entry Variations

Main entries are generally divided into three groups: center front entry, offset front entry and side entry. Center front entries are rather rare as they do not allow for a projecting bay or living room. They are most common with full width open porches. Approximately 23 examples are found in the district, such as at 2517 Kenilworth Avenue.

The offset front entry is the most common form in general and in this district, with over 930 examples. The offset front entry allows for a projecting bay, porch or living room covering the remaining three-quarters of the front elevation. An offset entry typically allowed for a small entry vestibule, providing more privacy to homeowners from callers and a necessary weather-break. Numerous examples of the offset front entry are found throughout the district, including 2404 Grove Avenue.

The third entry type is the side entry; literally providing the main entry on the side elevation and not the front. This orientation allows for a reconfigured floorplan with a full-width, front living room. The side entry could be flush or recessed with the side elevation or face the street as part of a projected entry wing. Side entries are very common on corner lots, but a few examples are found mid-block. In total, there are approximately 76 examples in the district. An excellent example of a side entry is found at 2241 Euclid Avenue. (Figure 8)

Porch/Bay Variations

The front porch or bay is a second element that characterizes the various sub-types of Chicago style bungalows. Although Bluestone did not include open porches as part of this sub-type, in reality many Chicago style bungalows had open porches in lieu of a projecting sunroom bay and there are just over 50 examples in the district. Consequently, porch type is also included here. A full width open porch precludes any type of projecting bay. For the purposes of this nomination, a full width porch is understood to mean a porch that extends to each side corner or nearly to the sides. Porches that have been later filled in as living space are considered to be of the open front porch type since that is how they were originally built. In a few cases, the porches are only three-quarters width with the entry separate from the porch. An example of a full width open porch is at 2413 Home Avenue.

The flat bay front has a front elevation that does not project beyond the front eave line of the house. A semblance of a bay is often provided by having an inset entry portico, which allows for side windows facing the portico. There are just over 730 properties of this subtype in the district. A typical example of the flat front bay is at 2317 East Avenue.

The square bay projects from the roof eave line in a rectangular manner. This allows for a sunroom or larger living room with windows on three sides. Approximately 47 square bay fronts are in the district. An excellent example is found at 2310 Clinton Avenue.

The polygonal bay, like the square bay, projects from the front eave line but with angled corners. Several types of polygonal bays are common. The simplest are ones that angle out from the front wall, similar to a bay window. These provide a modest increase in light, ventilation and living space. An example is found at 6921 26th Street. Other polygonal bays extend slightly from the front wall at right angles, but have clipped corners. Like the square bay, they provide larger living space and abundant windows on all three sides. An example is found at 6732 Riverside Drive. A final type of polygonal bay is often referred to as an "octagon" bay and those bungalows are classified here as Octagon Bungalows. The octagon bay extends significantly straight out from the front and makes up about half the shape of an octagon. While the distinction between the projecting polygonal bay and octagon bay is sometimes slight, on Octagon Bungalows such bays are quite distinctive and become an architectural element in themselves. For example, the Octagon Bungalow at 6845 Riverside Drive is so prominent it dominates the front elevation. Such houses are uncommon and were built as the high-end neighborhood homes, a further distinction between the Octagon Bungalow and more common polygonal bay bungalows. In total, there are approximately 140 polygonal bay sub-types in the district.

The curved bay projects as a slight curved front or more dramatically as a curved projecting bay. An example of a slightly curved bay is found at 2307 Wesley Avenue. A more dramatically curved projecting bay is found at 6812 Riverside Drive. There are approximately 58 examples in the district. (Figure 9)

Roofline Variations

The roofline is the third and final element that characterizes the various sub-types of Chicago style bungalows. There are two main roofline types that Bluestone identifies within the City of Chicago: The hipped roof and front gable roof. The hipped roof is the most common on Chicago Bungalows and in the district. A hipped roof provides a horizontal and low-slung appearance and allows more light to filter into the narrow gaps between houses. Almost all hipped roofs have a front dormer for light and ventilation of the attic space. A few have side dormers or cross gables. There are approximately 682 examples of hipped roofs in the district. The house at 2415 Oak Park Avenue is a typical example of a hipped roof with a front dormer.

Less common are front gable roofs and many of these have clipped gables, sometimes known as jerkinhead gables. There are approximately 113 front gable roofs in the district and another 195 with clipped gables. The house at 2309 Wesley Avenue is an excellent example of a clipped front gable roof. While not discussed by Bluestone, it is possible for Chicago style bungalows to have a Gambrel roof. These roofs appear to be a rare variation of the front gable type, but six examples can be found in the district, most in the 2500 block of Elmwood Avenue.

Another variation not discussed by Bluestone are Chicago Bungalows with front parapet rooflines. These homes are typically flat front type bungalows, but with a flat roof and front parapet rather than a hipped or gable roof. They tend to exhibit slightly Romanesque Revival stylistic characteristics, but generally have the simplicity of most Chicago Bungalows. (Figure 10) According to Joseph Biggott writing in The Chicago Bungalow, "In Cicero, Berwyn, and a few other locations, single-family bungalows were sometimes built with flat roofs."⁷¹ He characterizes these flat roof examples as a variation derived from two-flats. Approximately 66 examples of the parapet front bungalows are found throughout the district. An example with a more decorative parapet is found at 2422 Ridgeland Avenue. An example of a parapet front bungalow with a square bay is at 2219 Grove Avenue.

Other Building Types in the District

In addition to the Chicago style bungalow, several other building types are found in the district. The most common is the two-flat. (Figure 11) Two-flats within the district are essentially Chicago style bungalows stacked on top of one another. The two-flats typically have an offset front entry and may have projecting square bays. The roofline is most often a flat parapet but a few examples of hipped roofs are found in the district. The same types of brick, stone detailing and bands of windows are seen in the two-flats. The two-flat allowed a homeowner to supplement their income by renting the second flat or allowed extended families to live together with some privacy. The most elaborate examples in the district are found along the west side of the 2200 block of Oak Park Avenue; in addition, 2232 Oak Park Avenue is the quintessential two-flat version of a Chicago style bungalow with offset front entry, flat front and hipped roof. Another example is 2224 Oak Park Avenue with a curved bay front, offset front entry and hipped roof. The two-flat at 2324 Euclid is a square bay version with flat parapet roof; the building at 2240 Scoville Avenue has a polygon front bay and side entry.

There are also examples of common bungalows that are not Chicago Bungalows. Common bungalows tend to have their long sides facing the street and may feature side gable roofs. Many of these more elaborate bungalows are designed in the Craftsmen style. There are also numerous examples of one or one-and-a-half story bungalows designed in a distinctly Tudor Revival style. While these Tudor Revival style bungalows share many characteristics with the Chicago Bungalow type, their distinct roof forms and façades set them apart stylistically. (Figure 12) A typical example can be found at 2220 Gunderson Avenue. The more common Craftsman Bungalow type with a side gable roof and a prominent front dormer can be found at 2226 Grove Avenue.

Some of the older homes in the district are Gable-Front cottages or houses. These houses were mostly of frame construction with open front porches or stoops. Some have raised basements and others are at grade. The Gable-Front cottage at 2409 Clarence Avenue is wood framed with synthetic siding and a front bay window and covered stoop. It dates from 1911. The Gable-Front cottage at 2236 East Avenue dates from 1913 and has good integrity. It is wood framed with wood clapboard, a projecting square bay and side entry. Essentially it is a wood frame predecessor of the Chicago Bungalow. There is a two-story Gable-Front house at 2420 Clarence Avenue that is wood frame with synthetic siding. The entry is at the second floor with an open stair and covered stoop. It dates from 1909. Both houses do not exhibit any stylistic features.

A few of the Gable-Front cottages and houses are of brick construction but are otherwise identical to the frame versions; for instance, 2226 East Avenue is a good example with good integrity. It has an open front porch and offset entry. There is a slight bay to the front window and a gable window. The front is face brick with common brick on the sides.

Although almost entirely residential, the district does have a few non-residential type buildings. A handful of one part and two part commercial buildings served as neighborhood businesses. A two-story, two part commercial building is at 2347 Clarence Avenue. Although its storefront has been infilled, it still clearly reads as a former commercial storefront with residential on the second floor. Located on a corner lot, the storefront returns on the side and the store entry was at an angled corner. A separate stair entry is offset next to the storefront.

There are post-World War II ranch and split level homes on infill sites throughout the district. A few Chicago style raised ranches are also scattered about the district. (Figure 13) Since these houses were constructed after the period of significance in 1950, they are considered non-contributing.

Two school buildings are within the district; Hiawatha School and Piper School. Both contribute to the district and are good examples of early 20th century schools. Piper School has outstanding decorative terra cotta detailing with a Sullivanesque character to it. A few churches are in the district, though most do not contribute as they date after the period of significance. St. Odilo Church does not contribute but is an excellent example of the Mid-Century Modern style. Trinity Community Church does not contribute but is an excellent example of the Tudor Revival style. The former St. Odilo Church and School at 6617 23rd Street does contribute and was built in an Italian Renaissance style as both a church and school.

Architectural Styles Found in the District

While most Chicago Bungalows have little or no formal style associated with them, some do clearly feature stylistic characteristics and elements. Most common in the district are the Craftsman style and Prairie style. Flat parapet bungalows often feature some characteristics of the Romanesque Revival. And there are even some Chicago Bungalows in the district with Colonial Revival and Spanish Mission Revival characteristics. There are also a number of bungalows in the district that are not a Chicago Bungalow type, and therefore have a more distinct architectural style to them. The most common style for common bungalows is the Craftsman style. There are also numerous Tudor Revival bungalows found throughout the district.

The Craftsman style was popularized in the early 20th century by Gustav Stickley and the Greene brothers. It featured extensive woodwork meant to look as if cut and shaped by hand, brackets and open knee braces in roof eaves, and simple geometric decorations. The style, though often featuring mass-produced elements, was meant to convey the appearance of traditional craftsman artistry. Many bungalows through the country were designed in the Craftsman style and with some added details, a Chicago Bungalow could convey the style too. A row of California-style Craftsman Chicago Bungalows is found at the 2400 block of Kenilworth. (Figure 14) The house at 2411 Kenilworth Avenue is an example that has not been significantly altered and features a wood trellis entry portico and a projecting bay with a front gable. Another good example of a Chicago Bungalow in the Craftsman style is at 2301 Elmwood Avenue and features a front clipped gable roof with wood brackets and 3 over 1 double hung windows. A few homes in the district are not Chicago Bungalows but are in the Craftsman style. The house at 6849 Riverside Drive is an excellent example and features knee brace brackets in the eaves, stone craftsmanship and multi-paned windows.

The Prairie style originated in the Chicago region and remained popular in the region even after its general decline following World War I. In its pure form, the Prairie style house was low to the ground and emphasized its horizontality with low-pitched hip roofs, water tables and belt courses. Any ornamentation is strongly geometric. Leaded art glass windows featuring geometric patterns commonly filled bands of casement windows. The Prairie style was not easy to transfer into a Chicago Bungalow on a narrow city lot with its short side facing the street, but architects and builders did provide some basic Prairie style characteristics to some bungalows. Two good examples of a basic Chicago Bungalow with some horizontal lines and bands of casement windows are at 6727-29 Riverside Drive. (Figure 15) These also feature strong geometric ornament.

Many of the Chicago style bungalows in the district that feature flat parapet fronts have some characteristics of the Romanesque Revival style. Though very loosely associated with the style, these homes nonetheless feature castellated parapet walls and brick masonry with simple stone and brick detailing. The homes at 2219-23 Grove Avenue are typical. A few such houses feature arched entry porticos.

The Spanish Mission Revival was popular in the 1920s as California and the Southwest United States grew in population and people traveled there by train for business or pleasure. The Spanish Mission Revival was loosely based on the original Spanish missions of the Southwest in California, Arizona and New Mexico. Those original missions varied considerably in form, materials and detailing due to local conditions and available materials. Most Spanish Mission Revival is based on the California missions and feature red tile roofs, arched porches or porticos, stucco cladding, projecting vigas and curved parapet walls. In this district, two Chicago Bungalows at 2418-20 Elmwood Avenue feature some of those characteristics. (Figure 16) They have a front slanted roof clad in Spanish red tile with end parapets and an arched entry portico.

The Colonial Revival style is represented in both Chicago Bungalow and other building types in the district. Several Colonial Revival bungalows are located along the 2500 block of East Avenue featuring front gable bays with a fan light window placed above the first story window bays. The 2500 block of Elmwood Avenue features several Chicago Bungalows with Gambrel roofs. Other non-bungalow Colonial Revival examples include two-story homes with Dutch gambrel roofs and Classical porch columns. The house at 6837 Riverside Drive is a typical example. The house at 2341 Clinton Avenue is a stucco-clad, two-story home with a side Gambrel roof and portico with Classical columns and a balustrade. The entry features a paneled door and sidelights.

Another common style in the district is the Tudor Revival, most of which are bungalows. These homes have distinctive Tudor or English Cottage style characteristics such as steeply pitched roofs, rough-cut stone door and window surrounds and arched doors. The steeply pitched roof is often at the entry bay and is perpendicular to a side gable roof. Though stylistically based on English cottages, they have the same Chicago Bungalow layout and should be considered as a common bungalow type. Numerous examples, some more complex than others, are found throughout the district. A simple example is at 2520 Oak Park Avenue. A row of more stylistically complex bungalows is in the 6900 block of Riverside Drive that feature steeply pitched gables that extend all the way to grade, wood vergeboard, and battered walls. An excellent example of the Art Deco/Moderne style is an apartment building at 2348 Euclid Avenue. It features simple geometric lines and ornament and porthole windows as well as a slightly streamlined character with horizontal bands that wrap the corner.

A few other styles are found in small samples throughout the district. These include the Italian Renaissance style, which features light-colored brick, terra cotta ornamentation and clay tile roofs. The best examples are found at 6945-49 Riverside Drive as well as the original St. Odilo Church and School. (Figure 17)

In the post-World War II era, styles dramatically changed. The most common post-War styles in the district are the Mid-Century Modern and Minimal Traditional styles. The Mid-Century Modern style often features elaborate stone-work, a low-sloped gable or pitched roof, large picture windows and glass block windows or details. St. Odilo Church is an excellent example of the style. The house at 2534 East Avenue is typical of homes in the district in the style. It features a simple form with a picture window and a panel of stone detailing.

The Minimal Traditional style is a simplified form with minimal detailing. What little detailing that is added is usually in a Colonial Revival style. Houses usually have front or side gable roofs and may feature a wood entry surround, picture or bay window and dormers. An excellent example of the Minimal Traditional style is found at 6914 Riverside Drive. The style did originate in the 1930s and there are a few examples of contributing homes in the district, such as 2530 East Avenue (1942) and 6911 Riverside Drive (1947).

Architects and Builders

Because original building permits have been lost, only a few houses in the district can be documented as designed by a specific architect or built by a specific contractor. In all likelihood, most of the bungalows were probably not individually designed by architects, but built by builders in groups. Builders often worked from pre-purchased building plans or had an architect/draftsman on staff to modify standard plans for specific sites.⁷² The Radford Architectural Company was one such catalog plan source and was headquartered in Chicago and staffed by local architects. The same company also published "American Builder," a trade journal of residential home builders. The magazine published and sold house plans as well as offered articles on construction details and products. Its advertisers offered up a wealth of modern materials and products for constructing bungalows.⁷³ A builder could purchase complete construction documents for a house design, or could have their staff draftsman draw up a set of plans and details based on the schematic design shown in the catalog. That the same design was used repeatedly by the same builders is apparent in observing the similarities of houses within the same block. What is also apparent is that the builders in the district, perhaps guided by their hired draftsmen and architects, did vary exterior details to provide some level of differentiation to their houses.

Some of the more elaborate homes along and near Riverside Drive were more likely to have been individually designed by architects. A few of these are documented but most are not. The architects for some of the institutional buildings in the district are also documented. It is possible that some of these same architects also designed other homes in the district or did work for some of the local builders. The 1926 Berwyn Directory lists only two architects: Charles Vedra and Joseph Bednarik. Vedra is known to have designed at least one house in the district. It is also known that the Czech community supported each other and architects that did work in the district were likely Czech.⁷⁴ Several Czech architects were based in Chicago and Cicero at the time and also likely did design work in the district.

Radford Architectural Company

The Radford Architectural Company was a building design and plan firm that mass-produced building designs for sale to the public and construction industry. The firm also published trade journals, such as American Builder. It was founded in 1902 by William A. Radford. Radford had come to Chicago in the 1890s from Wisconsin with his millwork business making window sash and doors.⁷⁵ Radford settled in Riverside and by 1898 was publishing house plans to lumber suppliers and builders. The company published The Radford Ideal Homes in 1902 with over a hundred house plans meant for lower and middle income buyers. It would go through at least ten editions and was in print as late as 1919. Other plan catalogs followed, such as Radford's American Homes (1903), Radford's Artistic Homes (1908) and Radford's Brick Houses and How to Build Them (1912).

The Radford Company worked with local architects to design its catalog homes and prepare the full sets of construction documents. W.H. Schroeder and George W. Ashby are the two most cited architects, who together designed over 200 of the early schemes.⁷⁶ House plans were sold for about five dollars each, though some cost a little more or a little less. A purchaser would receive all architectural plans and details needed to build the house, as well as written specifications on materials and craftsmanship.⁷⁷ The company did not sell materials or entire house kits in the way Sears Roebuck & Company did. The market for these catalogs included builders, developers and individual home buyers. An individual could select a plan and present the documents to a builder of their choice. Or a builder could purchase several different house designs and build an entire neighborhood with minimal architectural costs. Many lumber supply warehouses sold the books to customers.⁷⁸

The American Builder magazine was geared to the construction industry, but also offered house designs for sale. Builders could purchase a house design from special features in the magazine, which by the 1920s were shown in full color. The magazine also advertised many of the materials and finishes that would be used on homes, such as roofing, siding and the latest bath fixtures. One such example is the "Gladstone," a Chicago Bungalow brick house. (Figure 18) It featured a small side-entry portico, an enclosed front sun porch, tiled hip roof, two main floor bedrooms and a dormered attic for extra bedrooms. An example pretty close in form can be found at 6729 Riverside Drive. Another standard Chicago Bungalow was shown in the May 1921 issue.⁷⁹ This design featured a small entry portico, front sun porch, hipped roof with a front dormer and two main floor bedrooms. This design was very similar to another Chicago Bungalow design, the "Watkins." These forms are ubiquitous throughout the district, such as in the 2300 block of East Avenue.

Although no direct records have linked the Radford Architectural Company house designs to specific bungalows in the district, the fact that it was a Chicago-based company that originated out of Riverside and that Ashby was one of the most prolific designers on staff suggests the possibility that some of the bungalows in the district were Radford Company designs. Most Chicago-style bungalows were not individually designed by architects, so the likelihood that many, if not most, were built from mass-produced plan books is high. Given that likelihood, it is not a stretch to assume at least some of the builders used plans purchased or derived from those by the Radford Company.

George W. Ashby was born in Indiana and attended Purdue University. He moved to Chicago in 1880 and first worked for acclaimed Chicago engineer and architect William LeBaron Jenney. In 1887 Ashby moved to the relatively new suburb of Riverside, where Jenney had designed many of its earliest buildings. Ashby oversaw construction of St. Paul's Episcopal Church (Jenney, 1883) and designed the Riverside Town Hall in 1895. In 1893 he moved to neighboring Berwyn where he lived until his death.⁸⁰

In 1903, Ashby joined the Radford Architectural Company, which produced building plans and architectural publications. He became its vice president in 1908 and reportedly designed many of the house plans numbered 500 and above. He also published his own book, Ashby's Design of Schools and Libraries in 1909 and was a noted architect of schools.⁸¹ He is reported to have designed most of the grade schools in Cicero, Berwyn, Stickney and Lyons from the early 20th Century, including the Charles E. Piper School at 2435 Kenilworth Avenue and Hiawatha School at 6539 26th Street.

In 1914, Ashby formed a partnership with his son Wilbert and C.E. Schultze under the name Ashby, Ashby & Schultze. The firm designed numerous schools and libraries throughout the Chicago region and Midwest, including West Division and South Division Schools in Des Plaines, the Woodrow Wilson School in Cicero, the Des Plaines Carnegie Library, Maine Township High School, and Morton West High School in Berwyn. Another son, Ernest, was in the construction industry.

There is no current documentation that Ashby designed any of the homes in the district, but it seems likely as he was living in Berwyn and was well known as an architect of houses. Some of these may have been individual designs for homes along Riverside Drive, while others may have been stock designs he did for the Radford Architectural Company and purchased by builders.

Thomas M. Filas (1883-1939)

Thomas M. Filas was a first generation Czech born and raised in Chicago's Bohemian neighborhoods. He completed school only through the seventh grade before working as a clerk with the Post Office. At age twenty-one, he took several drafting and mechanical correspondence courses and got a job as a draftsman with the Chicago Department of Public Works.⁸²

By 1915, Filas was working independently as an architect, contractor and real estate developer. He designed and built his own jumbo bungalow home at the corner of West 25th Street and 61st Avenue in Cicero (Clyde at the time). He also developed a neighborhood of bungalows there, under the guise of the Suburban Real Estate Improvement Company, which he incorporated in 1921. Filas served as developer, architect and builder for over thirty-five homes there.⁸³ The neighborhood is only six blocks from the east boundary of the district.

To date, no documentation can connect Filas to buildings or houses in the district, but he was a significant designer and developer in the area. According to a Czech newspaper, Filas was a "well known Bohemian architect and builder" with "ten years experience in every phase of the building and real estate business."⁸⁴ The same article also noted that his firm, the Suburban Real Estate Improvement Company, "devotes itself exclusively to the erection of homes in Cicero and vicinity." Filas was architect for numerous commercial and institutional buildings in the area, including Our Lady of the Mount Catholic Church in Cicero (1930) and for the Ridgeland State Bank just outside the district boundaries at 26th Street and Ridgeland Avenue (1925).

Joseph W. McCarthy was a prominent Chicago architect for the Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago. He was especially prolific during the tenure of Cardinal George Mundelein (1915-39) and eventually designed over forty churches.⁸⁵ McCarthy was effective designing in various styles, ranging from Gothic Revival to Italian Renaissance Revival to Colonial Revival and even incorporated elements of the Art Deco Style. Early in his career he worked for Daniel Burnham & Associates (1901-09) before forming his own firm in 1911.⁸⁶ Examples of Chicago Archdiocese projects by McCarthy include St. Sabina Church and Rectory at 7817 S. Throop (1920s), St. Philip Neri Church at 2126 East 72nd Street (1928), St. Giles Church in Oak Park (1928), and Mundelein College at 1012 Sheridan Road (1930s).

McCarthy was architect for St. Odilo Church and School at 6617 23rd Street. It was completed in 1928 in an Italian Renaissance Style. It is of note that the same style was used at St. Giles Church, which dates from the same period and had the same combination of church on the main level with a school above it.

Joseph J. Novy was a Bohemian immigrant who arrived in Chicago in 1880. Little is known about his education or early career, but by the early 20th century he was living and practicing architecture in the Lawndale neighborhood of Chicago. Novy designed several prominent commercial buildings along Cermak Road and in the Czech-dominated neighborhoods of Chicago, Cicero and Berwyn. Significant examples include the Sokol Slavsky Building at 6130 West Cermak in Cicero (1925), the 26th Street Bank at 3854 West 26th Street in Chicago (1920) and the Sekera Building at 2719 West Cermak in Chicago (1920). Novy is also known to have designed several homes throughout the Chicago region. For the Sokol Slavsky Building, Novy teamed with fellow Czech architect Joseph Bednarik.⁸⁷

To date, the only house in the district that is a documented Novy design is 2312 Grove Avenue (1924). It seems very likely that he designed other homes on or near Riverside Drive, using his connections with the Czech community to get clients. By 1930 he had moved to Riverside where he lived for several decades. He died in LaGrange and is buried in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Charles Vedra (1891-1966)

Charles Vedra was a Bohemian immigrant who arrived in Chicago about 1907. Little is known about his education but he received his Illinois Architectural license in 1915. He was working independently in the teens, and in 1916 opened an office at 3734 West 26th Street in Chicago and was designing homes and small storefront buildings. By 1920, he was working as an architect for a bridge company and living with his parents in Chicago. By 1930 he was living at 1917 Grove Avenue in Berwyn and had his own practice. The 1926 Berwyn Directory lists his office at 5919 Cermak.

An area example of his work includes a commercial storefront building at 213-15 Harrison Street in Oak Park (1948). None of his work appears in the Chicago Historic Resources Survey. Vedra is best known locally for his designs of the Dvorak House at 6945 Riverside Drive and its twin sister, the James Cech House at 6949 Riverside Drive, both dating from 1928. It is not clear how Vedra got the commission, but Cech was a builder and may have known Vedra from other projects. Both houses are large scale Chicago Octagon Bungalows but with Italian Renaissance Revival stylistic detailing.

Clement Vittner (1892-death date unknown)

Clement Vittner was of Czech heritage; his father emigrated from Bohemia and was a carpenter. In the early years of his career, Vittner alternately partnered with several other architects and had his own sole practice. In 1915 he had an office with partner John Klucina at 5700 West Cermak (22nd Street) in Cicero. His office location moved as his partnerships changed, but they mostly remained in Cicero and he was living in Cicero in 1930.

Vittner's specialty was reportedly hotels and one example is at 25th and 53rd Streets in Cicero. He is known to have designed the bungalow at 2323 Elmwood in 1928 for Frank and Anna Koblich. Given his heritage and connections to the building trades, it is likely he also designed other homes in the district.

Builders

As with architects, specific builders of homes in the district cannot usually be documented due to the lack of building permit records. However, it was common for residential builders to construct their own home in the block or neighborhood where they were building other homes.⁸⁸ Several builders did live in the district, and it is a fair assumption that they built their own homes and others in the district. Those builders that did live in the district include:

John Baumruk (6710 Riverside Drive)
James Cech (6949 Riverside Drive)
James Dolory (2312 Euclid Avenue)
Richard Dusil (6714 Riverside Drive)
Frank Koutnik (6915 Riverside Drive)
Jerry Paugole (6673 Riverside Drive)
Michael Polny (2401 Ridgeland Avenue)
Frank J. Stastny (2302 Clinton Avenue)
Carl Tomasek (6928 Riverside Drive)

It is likely that some other prominent Czech builders active in Berwyn during the 1920s also built homes in the district.⁸⁹ (Figures 19-22) A few that are listed in the 1926 and 1932 directories or had local marketing include:

Berwyn Construction Company (2140 Oak Park Avenue)
Fleishman Contractors (1446 Cuyler Avenue)
Adolph Havlicek (7131 31st Street)
James Karban Construction Company (1809 Racine Avenue, Chicago)
Jospeh Mrizek (1646 Austin Boulevard, Cicero)

That Czech builders were active and cooperative is evidenced by the formation of the Builders Brick Company in 1906. The company purchased clay deposits in Chicago Heights and a rail line supplied bricks directly to the Czech dominated neighborhoods. It was estimated that the clay deposits lasted through the building boom of the 1920s.⁹⁰ An article announcing the formation of the company noted that, "Bohemians are managing it; Bohemian money is invested in the undertaking; and Bohemians will be its main supporters."⁹¹ That this company supplied nearly all of the brick for the Chicago Lawndale, Cicero and Berwyn bungalow belt is fairly evident.

John Baumruk

John Baumruk was a Czech immigrant and listed as a carpenter building houses in the 1920 census. By 1930 he was living at 6710 Riverside Drive. He happened to live next door to Richard Dusil and the two may have been business partners. Baumruk's son, Edward, was married to Dusil's daughter and living in the Dusil household in 1930.

James Cech

James Vaclav Cech was a Czech immigrant and prominent builder. He is credited for building two of the finest homes in the district, his own at 6949 Riverside and its twin sister at 6945 for the Dvorak family in 1928. Given the size and quality of the home, it is likely that his construction business was good and that he built other homes in the district. His son James Jr. was a mason and probably worked in his father's business. By 1935 he had settled in Brookfield.

Richard Dusil

Richard Dusil was a Czech immigrant and became a prominent contractor and businessman. He was Treasurer of the Builders Brick Company and was a director of the Lawndale State Bank. By 1920, Dusil was living in a two-story brick home at 6714 Riverside Drive and likely built it and the Klima house across the street (6723). Given that he was one of the first residents of the district and seemed well connected to Klima and the Czech community, it is likely that he built many of the early, pre-1920 homes in the area of Riverside Drive and Euclid Avenue and possibly many other homes in the district.

Frank Koutnik

Frank Koutnik emigrated from Bohemia about 1891 and settled in Chicago. He is documented as building various flats and commercial buildings as early as 1907 and built his own home at 6915 Riverside Drive in 1924. Koutnik was retired and still living in his home as late as 1940.

Michael Polny

Michael Polny emigrated from Bohemia in 1905 and settled in Chicago. He was a mason and built his own home at 2401 Ridgeland Avenue in 1923. His son Michael also was a mason and may have worked in the family business.

Frank Stastny

Frank J. Stastny was born in Illinois to Czech parents and grew up in Chicago. He built his own home at 2302 Clinton Avenue in 1925. His wife, Helen, kept the books and they ran the business from their home for many years.

Period of Significance Justification

The period of significance for the Central Berwyn Bungalow District is from circa 1900 through 1949. This period covers the rapid development of the district in the 1920s, but also recognizes construction and development prior to and following the boom. Some of the earliest homes date from the first decade of the 20th century and represent pre-bungalow building types and development patterns. Development increased in the 1910s and especially after World War I. Some of the earliest Chicago style bungalows were built in this period. The 1920s saw the most substantial growth and was evenly distributed throughout the district.

Following the onset of the Great Depression in 1929, building slowed but continued with various infill of lots mostly with Chicago Bungalows and Tudor Revival style bungalows. This development and construction pattern continued through World War II. In the late 1940s, most new construction followed the style and type of the pre-War era. Starting in 1950 however, a clear shift in building type can be seen. New homes were mostly built as raised ranches or split-levels. Building massing and site orientations changed, as did exterior masonry materials and colors. Consequently, buildings built after 1950 no longer fit the building type and patterns that make this district significant and shall be non-contributing.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundaries includes buildings that are 50 years old and represent a significant concentration of Chicago Bungalows, a predominate architectural style and building type for working class single family homes found in many Chicago neighborhoods and inner-ring suburbs during the 1920s and 1930s. The district's boundaries also include a number of two-flats, apartment blocks and other building types designed in other architectural styles popular during the years before the Great Depression and World War II.

In addition to being the most significant concentration of Chicago Bungalows in Berwyn, the boundaries were also selected for specific reasons. Along the northern boundary of the district is Cermak Road, which is predominately commercial in land use and building types. The northern boundary mainly follows the alleyways between the commercial buildings fronting Cermak Road and the residential buildings within the district to the south. The western boundary at Home Avenue and Riverside Drive borders the campus of J. Sterling Morton West High School and its athletic facilities. The district's southern boundary alternates between the alleyway north of 26th Street and 26th Street itself where pockets of Chicago Bungalow, other homes and local schools are included; commercial properties fronting 26th Street are excluded from the district. Residential uses along the south side of 26th Street were constructed mostly after the district's period of significance ending in 1949 and are excluded from the boundaries. East of the alley between Ridgeland Avenue and Cuyler Avenue, which comprises the district's eastern boundary, the residential architectural character transitions from Chicago Bungalow types to mainly Gable -Fronted and Romanesque Revival single family homes and two flats.

Hi Barbara,

Central Berwyn Bungalow Historic District, Cook Co., IL 15000521

Large district: 236 Acres, almost 3,000 buildings

ISSUES:

1. Location: Street & Number left blank. For districts, we need a boundary (even a rough one) to put in our Federal Register pending notice. (Kevin was able to cull one from Boundary Justification)
2. Criteria Consideration "A" checked but not needed for this district. Did not code.
3. Longitude decimals, in this hemisphere, need to be expressed as Negative numbers. Coded as such.

Thanks, Edson
