DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The physical condition of the exterior of the building is excellent. It is historically intact, and has not been altered since its construction.

The interior is also in excellent condition. Minor additions have recently been made, such as elevated theater seats, and a large baptismal font; both of which can be removed at a minor expense. interior can be made historically intact in regard to the building's original furnishings -- and again at a minimal expense. Of its original furnishings, only the chandelier remains in the church. However, almost all of the other furnishings have been relocated in Greek Orthodox churches in nearby cities and can easily be brought back into the church. These items would be two, five-foot single pedestal brass candelabrae; Byzantine paintings; the full Byzantine icon screen (iconostasis) which was originally in front of the altar. The original pews, or "stasidia" (unique to this country, but still found in small churches in Greece) were located along the sidewalls. They consisted of arm rests to be used while a worshipper stood erect, and a hinged seat that was lowered to sit on. The only other seating in the church was chairs located both on the main floor and upstairs in the gallery, where the women sat.

interior features are from the Byzantine tradition

The stylistic description of the church was given by and quoted from Loren Partridge, Ph.D., who is currently a professor of Art History at the University of California at Berkeley, and who is also a member of B.A.H.A. (Berkeley Architectural Heritage Assoc.). He visited the building on May 13, 1977 and gave to this committee the following description and opinions:

The style of the church is in the Beaux-Arts manner. The church is the clearest example of the Neo-Greek style within the category of Beaux-Arts classicism. This Neo-Greek style is expressed by the Greek temple facade which is characterized by a triangular pedment above, supported by fluted Doric columns. The facade however has an unusual temple front, as the two Doric columns are in "antis". This means that the columns are within the block of the building. This is a definite classical Greek feature, evidenced today at the Treasury of Delphi, and also found on top of the Acropolis. This particular feature is very rare in terms of the Beaux-Arts style, especially as that style exists in the Bay Area. This feature of two columns in antis is very rare: Professor Partridge states that he knows of no other such building in the Bay Area having this feature. The exterior of the building is

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The early Greek Orthodox churches built by immigrant communities in this country were more than places of worship. They were also cultural centers. A place where a heritage of Greek art, music, and language were constant; where human values, morals, friendship, devotion These churches became the hub for all social activities in the immigrant communities. They were a place for rejoicing, for dialogue, for language schools, for dancing and the learning of folk dances that were centuries old. They were places where tradition was learned, cherished and most important, preserved. From the arrival of the first Greek immigrant to the East Bay in Vallejo in 1890, until 1920, the Greek immigrants of the Oakland vicinity lived together in the same part of town, struggling for survival, bound together by the same language, relion and traditions. They were hard working, poor people, many of whom were illiterate with an obligation to their faith and a simultaneous desire to establish themselves in their new country. From these humble beginnings a new community began to develop. A turning point occurred in the lives of these pioneers of Oakland with the construction of the church. This building provided them with a permanent structure in which to congregate. The building of this church represents a landmark in the development of the Greek community, as it solidified the migration of the Greeks to America with a sense of permanence and belonging in American society. With this sense of permanence the cultural and social life which the church provided, rendered to the pioneers the means by which the next generation was able to contribute to the community at large. The next generation provided the larger community of Oakland with a nucleus of men and women who contributed to the professions of the arts, of state and city government, of the judiciary, of the business world and of education.

This building is a symbol of struggle and survival in America. It is the symbol of the struggle to fulfill the "American Ideal", in that the spirit and direction of the nation are founded upon and reflected in this building's past. It is a tangible reminder of the making of the past history of the United States. The building should be preserved as a living part of our community life and development in order to give a sense of orientation of the American people. Its preservation as an historical site is a visible continuity with the past.

decorated with Neo-Greek motifs. There are Doric cornices going around the building. There are also stylized Greek palmettes and meander designs which decorate the exterior of the church--all elements of Neo-Greek tradition. The white painted exterior of the church assimilates the likeness of an ancient Greek marble temple.

The floor plan of the church is Byzantine. The plan is in the shape of a Greek cross. This means that the church was centrally planned with equal arms. The central plan is crowned by an hemishperical The sanctuary is tri-partite; that is, divided into three parts to accommodate the celebration of the Divine Liturgy. A transept is present, which serves to separate the clergy from the laymen during the liturgy. At the entrance of the church there is the semblance of a narthex, where the laymen would light candles, preparing themselves before entering the main body of the church. All of these features derive from the Byzantine tradition. Within the church there is a gallery (mezzanine). The galleries as such are almost always found in the village churches of Greece today. This is where the women would go during the religious services, while the men stayed below.

This church is the oldest Greek Orthodox church in the East Bay Area. It is the second to the oldest in the entire state of California, and for these reasons should be given a place in the state registry of historical landmarks.

Professor Partridge concluded that artistically, stylistically, and architecturally this structure has merit, and as such should be preserved. Its distinction derives from its very pure Neo-Greek elements. He also recommends that the building be preserved for its very pure and clear-cut Neo-Greek characteristics. Although there are several examples of Beaux-Arts architecture in the Bay Area, this particular structure is outstanding for its purity and clarity.

8 Significance

This building is a cultural property worthy of historical preservation for its historic and artistic (please refer to item number 7 Description) value, and should be included in the protective inventory of irreplaceable resources of this country. In building the future, the past acts as a guide to create a richer environment, thus, this building would serve as a visual reminder of the struggle for the American Ideal.
