ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE of area. (Describe physical setting, general character, and architecturally significant structures).

Corky Row is a large (96-acre), lozenge-shaped area bordered roughly by Plymouth Avenue (Eight Rod Way), Second Street, Lyon Street, Hartwell Street, and Route 195. The major commercial thoroughfare, Rodman Street (the former street-car line) bisects the district from east to west. The early grid plan of the district north of Morgan Street was abandoned after the Civil War to accommodate the steep topography of the southern half of the district. As a result, the southern half has north/south streets cutting a sharp angle across the hill.

Much of Corky Row's housing stock, like that of Fall River in general, is comprised of 4-6 unit tenement houses. Three-story frame buildings, these structures are large, often with mansard as well as gable roofs. Their architectural interest derives from bracketed cornices, pairs of 2-story bay windows and single or paired center doors, articulated either by Italianate Victorian door-hoods or, for the earliest tenements, trabeated Greek Revival door enframements. These earliest houses have heavy pilastered cornerboards and have small square attic lights set below the eaves; (Continued)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE of area. (Explain development of area, what caused it, and how it affected community; be specific).

The first phase of Fall River's industrial growth was between 1813-1840. At this time residential neighborhoods fanned outward from the town's "four corners" in the heart of the central business district. Expansion to the south of downtown began the development of what has long been known as 'Corky Row'. The district includes some of the earliest buildings of this expansion -- late Federal and Greek Revival houses from the initial phase of settlement along the Quequechan River. However, after the Civil War when land values in this center city neighborhood close to several major mills (Tecumseh, Robeson and Davol) skyrocketed in value, owners developed their lots with spatial economy, pioneering nearly every form of multi-family dwelling later built throughout the city. The name of the district is derived from the Irish immigrant population which dominated the community after 1845. Most of these immigrants worked in the nearby mills, although some became entrepreneurs, building tenements or running stores and saloons. The Irish mill workers, mostly spinners and weavers, began the labor movement in Fall River, playing a central role in the struggle against "speed-ups and stretch-outs" -- the manufacturers' pressures for increased production. By 1889, 2,000 of the 9,000 weavers in the city were organized under the name of the Weavers Protective Union. Out of Corky Row and this local labor movement came a national figure -- James Tansey, considered to be the "dean of the Fall River labor movement" and later the first President of the United Textile Workers of America. Corky Row has for over a century been a workers' neighborhood, even today struggling to meet minimum standards of health and housing, but continually serving as a funnel through which the working poor of other lands have been assimilated into American society.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (Continuation)

this utilitarian Greek Revival feature was carried through the second half of the nineteenth century. The majority of the tenements, however, are more simply trimmed with local machine-made ornament. Because real estate values were highest near the mills and downtown, and the granite bedrock made excavating foundations and installing water service pipes expensive, these houses were built very close together, and clusters, courts and alleys, with a number of inner-block buildings screened from view by the large houses on the street, were created. In contrast to the density of the workers' housing which dominates the district, along the lower portion of Second Street on the western edge of the district, there is a cluster of high-style single-family dwellings in a variety of styles. These hark back to an era (before 1874) when mill-owners still lived close to their work. They provide an interesting counterpoint to the rest of the district. The Corky Row Historic District chronicles the evolution of mill-workers' housing from the Civil War period to World War I in Fall River. It forms a cohesive, architecturally rich and diverse district of workers' housing that, although a victim of arson and deterioration in recent years, is struggling towards revitalization; it meets Criteria A and C of the National Register of Historic Places.

INVENTORY

As Corky Row has 435 residential structures--an Inventory by street giving address, plat and lot, square footage, historic name, date and style, as well as owners' names and their mailing addresses, is appended. This Inventory also indicates Non-Contributing Structures () and Secondary Contributors (). Much of the significance of Corky Row's streetscapes is the density, which creates such a tight visual effect and evokes the difficult working conditions of the nineteenth century. Non-Contributing () is usually applied to infill structures newer than 50 years, not harmonious with the general character of the district. It is also applied to historic structures that have been irretrievably altered. Secondary contributors () are those structures that feature some alterations (for the most part reversible) and that by their scale and siting contribute to the character of the district.

- Eligibility for Federal tax benefits. If a property is listed in the National Register, certain tax provisions may apply. The Tax Reform Act of 1976 as amended by the Revenue Act of 1978 and the Tax Treatment Extension Act of 1980, and the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, contain provisions intended to encourage the preservation of depreciable historic structures by allowing favorable tax treatments for rehabilitation, and to discourage destruction of historic buildings by eliminating certain Federal tax provisions for demolition of historic structures. Beginning January 1, 1982, the Economic Recovery Act replaces the rehabilitation tax incentives available under prior law with a 25% investment tax credit for rehabilitations of certain historic commercial, industrial and residential rental buildings. This can be combined with a 15 year cost recovery period for the adjusted basis of the historic building. Historic buildings with certified rehabilitations receive additional tax savings because they are exempt from any requirement to reduce the basis of the building by the amount of credit.

Attention: Patricia L. Weslowski
Executive Director
State Historic Preservation Officer
Massachusetts Historical Commission

Gentlemen:

With reference to the August 26, 1982 letter advising that our property is located in the Fall River Multiple Resource Area and that the district will be considered by the State Review Board for nomination to the National Register of Historic Places, we herewith state our objection to the listing of our property.

The entire front of the house has been changed in the last twenty-five years. The long single flight of stairs has been removed and a cement platform with two stairways covered with bluestone was installed. Also, an addition was made to the front room on the south side of the property. Aluminum siding has been put on the house.

In view of the above, the property is greatly changed from its original design and we do not feel that it would qualify for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. In addition, the first floor of this property is used as a funeral home and we do not wish to be restricted on any changes we may feel necessary to benefit this business.

Gentlemen:

I have received your letter of February 28, 1983, in which you tell me that the property of which I am a co-owner at 317 Fourth St., 172 Morgan St, and 424-436-442 Third St., Fall River, Mass., Qualifies as historical property worthy of preservation.

I would like to inform you that I have completely rehabilitated the property in question. There is nothing left that was original except the site. I have no intention of destroying the building but I question whether this property could be honestly considered to be of historical value. Therefore, I am opposed to this being considered historical property, and I oppose the area being considered an historical district.

Fall River, Mass 02721

Dear Ms. Regan:

Your property at 218-222 John Street, Fall River is being considered for listing in the National Register of Historic Places as part of the Corky Row Historic District. The merits of an historic district are judged upon the relationships of buildings and their joint ability to convey a sense of community history, rather than on the specific qualities of the component buildings. Listing in a National Register district places no constraints or reviews on what owners may do with their property, unless they are using state or federal funds.

Corky Row Historic District is a large (96 acre), densely developed, 19th century neighborhood of predominantly working-class housing. The first phase of Fall River's industrial and residential expansion (1813-1840) is documented in the district by large Federal and Greek Revival houses. Many of these are single-family high-style structures harking back to an era (before 1874) when mill owners still lived close to their work. After the Civil War, when land values in this center city neighborhood, close to several major mills, skyrocketed in value, owners developed their lots with spatial economy, pioneering nearly every form of multi-family dwelling later built throughout the City. Corky Row's streetscapes, which create such a tight visual effect evoking the difficult working conditions of the 19th century, are dominated by large, three-story, four to six unit tenement houses. Their architectural interest derives from bracketted cornices, pairs of two-story bay windows and single or paired center doors, articulated by Italianate Victorian door-hood enframements. The district's name reflects that high volume of Irish immigrant mill-workers who dominated the neighborhood after 1845 and who played a central role in the labor movement, both locally and nationally.

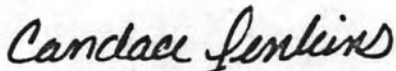

All of the property owners within the Corky Row area have been notified by mail and public notice of the pending National Register consideration. If a majority of owners submit notarized objections, the district cannot be listed, even if it is found to be significant.

Please be aware that according to Federal regulations governing the National Register program (36CFR 60) objections must be notarized to be valid. I refer you to page 2 of our original notification letter (copy enclosed) for further clarification. If you object to the listing of your property, you must submit a notarized statement before April 13, 1983. This statement should include the address of the property and affirm that you are the owner.

The nomination of Corky Row and other structures and districts within the city represents a substantial amount of work by many local citizens and groups, most notably, the Fall River office of Historic Preservation. We sincerely hope that you will support their efforts to preserve the city's heritage by withdrawing your objection.

Sincerely,

This statement should include the address of the property and affirm that you are the owner.

The nomination of Corky Row and other structures and districts within the city represents a substantial amount of work by many local citizens and groups, most notably, the Fall River office of Historic Preservation.
