Description Summary:

The F. Leonard Wailes Law Office building is located at 116-118 East Main Street in the central business area of Salisbury, the seat of Wicomico County, Maryland. Erected in 1927, the two-story, four-bay, double-pile brick building faces north, opposite the Wicomico County Courthouse in a line of early- to mid-twentieth century commercial buildings. The building is distinguished by neo-Federal architectural finishes including Flemish and common bond brickwork, with arched window and door openings defining the first floor and four six-over-six sash windows lighting the second floor. The cornice is trimmed with a finely executed series of tapered modillion blocks. The interior is finished with raised-panel wainscoting and ogee molded backband surrounds. A secondary entrance on the east side of the building opens into a side staircase that rises to the second floor office space.

General Description

The F. Leonard Wailes Law Office is a two-story, four-bay Neo-Federal brick building constructed in 1927 at 116-118 East Main Street in the central business area of Salisbury, the seat of Wicomico County, Maryland. The commercial building faces north with the ridge of its gable roof oriented on an east/west axis, and it stands in line with other early- to mid-twentieth century structures across the street from the Wicomico County Courthouse.

The brick walls are laid in a combination of Flemish and common bond, above a fully excavated cellar. The north (main) elevation is entirely Flemish bond as is the west side wall. The east wall, however, is laid in Flemish bond only within six feet of the front corner, while the balance of the wall, obscured by the adjacent commercial block, is six-course common bond. The south (rear) wall is five- to six-course common bond as well. The medium pitched gable roof is partially covered with slate. Behind the office is a paved parking lot accessed by an alley at the rear.

The north (main) elevation is a symmetrical four-bay facade with the first floor defined by two arched entrances on each side of a tripartite segmental arched window opening. The partially glazed doors are framed by pilasters and rest on thick stone sills. Each door opening is topped by an arched surround filled with a leaded glass transom. The leaded window panes follow a fan pattern. Each door opening is accented with a single line of rowlocks. The center, tripartite window opening is defined by a center eight-over-eight sash window flanked by narrow four-over-four sash windows. The three windows rest on a thick stone sill and are spanned by a segmental arched transom window filled with leaded glass panes. The fan pattern used in the windows is repeated. The second floor is marked by four six-over-six sash windows that rise from a stone beltcourse that serves as the window sill for each opening. Ovolo molded backband surrounds frame each window opening, which has a brick jack arch. Trimming the base of the roof is a finely detailed block cornice. A series of gracefully tapered modillion blocks is grouped with a Wall-of-Troy bed molding under the crown molding. The gutter is built into the cornice with downspouts fixed at each corner.

The west gable end is defined by a combination of single and paired six-over-six sash windows framed by ovolo molded backband surrounds. The top of the gable end wall is finished with a parapet covered by a stone cap. A chimney stack rises at the roof peak, and it is topped by a stone cap as well.

The east gable end is similarly treated with an asymmetrical fenestration of six-over-six sash windows topped by jack arches. A parapet wall covered with a stone cap finishes the top of the gable end, and a narrow brick stack rises through the peak. The east side elevation has the first six feet of the north corner laid in Flemish bond to match the street elevation, but the wall surface farther back within the alley space is six-course common bond as is the back of the building.

The rear of the office building is extended by a small two-story one-room wing which is covered by a nearly flat roof framed by low parapet walls. A small shed roofed extension on the west side of the rear wing houses the cellar stair. The south side of the rear wing is pierced by three two-over-two sash windows topped by brick jack arches. Rising from the southeast corner of the main block is a tall brick chimney stack.

The first floor interior is divided into five principal rooms with a side stair providing access to the second floor. A cellar entrance, located under the main staircase, has been converted into a storage closet. The front room serves as the waiting room and receptionist's office. A low paneled wall topped by a turned balustrade encloses a desk area, while the perimeter of the room is fitted with a 4' high raised panel wainscoting. The windows and doors are framed by an ogee molded backband surrounds. Two-panel doors open into two rooms of nearly equal size; the room on the east side of the building is an inner secretarial office, while the west room serves as the law office library and conference room. The walls in each room are fitted with raised-panel wainscoting, and ogee molded backband surrounds frame the window and door openings. Floor to ceiling bookcases line the walls in the library. The back of the law office building is divided into two rooms as well with an attorney's office on the west side and an inner office on the east. The east room has access to a law office safe, which was manufactured by York Safe . Lock Company, York, Pennsylvania. Fixed inside the heavy outer door are thin double leaf doors that open into a small room fitted with board shelves on three walls. The safe floor is concrete. The walls of the two rear rooms are fitted in a similar fashion to the other rooms with raised-panel wainscoting and ogee molded backbands that frame the door and window openings. Located in the southeast corner of the first floor is a downstairs bathroom.

The second floor is less elaborately finished. The east stairwell has been modified with the introduction of a separate partition to provide a private entrance to the second floor office space. When this modification was executed the cellar entrance was converted into a small closet. The staircase is marked by a square newel post topped by a simple cap. The newel post anchors a molded handrail, which is supported as well by a series of square balusters. At the head of the stair is a short hall that provides access to four separate offices and a bathroom. The bathroom is fixed in the southeast corner at the end of the hall. The office space is divided with two private rooms that front Main Street. A large inner office comprises the center of the second floor space, and it separates the front rooms from a third office located in the southwest corner. The two-panel doors are framed by ogee molded surrounds, and there is no wainscoting.

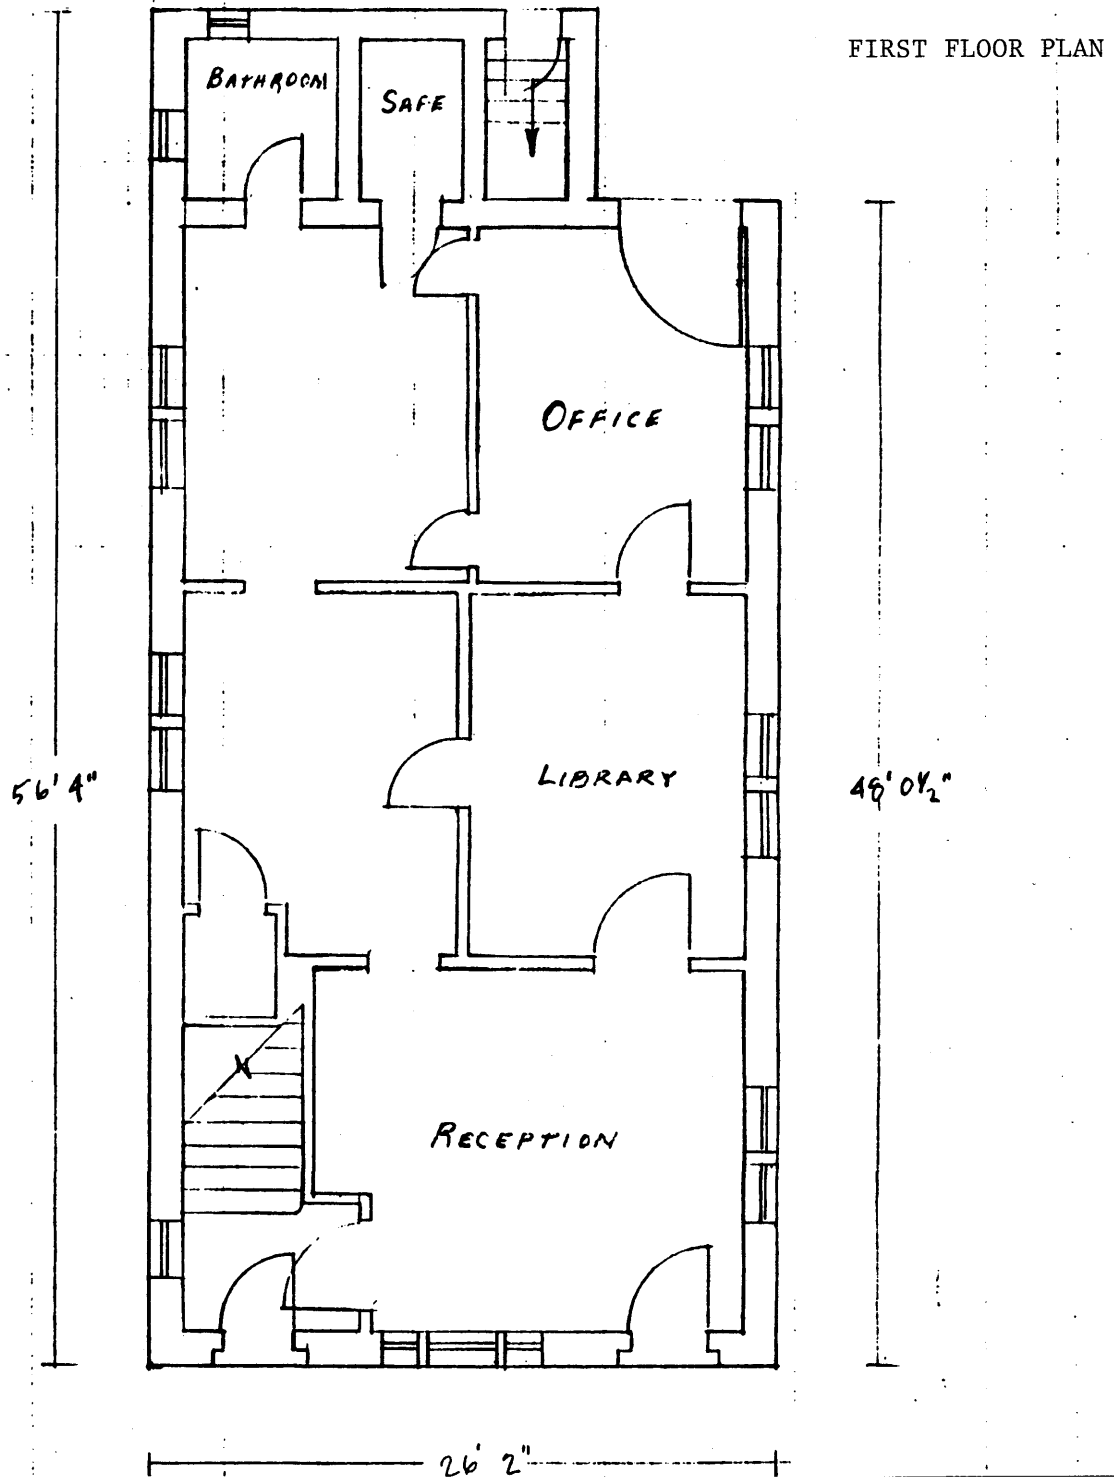

Access to the cellar is gained by means of an exterior door in the rear wall of the building. The two-room cellar has exposed five-course common bond walls. A series of circular sawn floor joists support a diagonal plank subfloor. Fixed in the northeast corner of the front room is the original cellar stair, which retains an unpainted staircase distinguished by a molded handrail and square newel post.

Significance Summary

The F. Leonard Wailes Law Office building is significant under Criterion C for its architectural character. Designed by Salisbury architect W. Twilley Malone and constructed in 1927, the two-story, four-bay brick building is a particularly fine and well preserved example of early twentieth century law office design incorporating neo-Federal elements in an adaptation of an urban townhouse form. The exterior is richly detailed with Flemish bond masonry, arched openings with leaded transoms, and a finely crafted modillion cornice apparently derived from a local 19th-century source. The building retains the majority of its original interior plan and finishes as well, including raised-panel wainscoting, ogee molded backbands framing windows and doors, and a large built-in safe.

RESOURCE HISTORY AND HISTORIC CONTEXT

Early law office architecture has largely disappeared from Salisbury, the seat of local government and commerce. The small frame buildings commonly used as law offices during the latter part of the nineteenth century were destroyed in the October 1886 fire that leveled Salisbury's business district. The earliest surviving example is the Jay Williams law office (WI-269) at 116 North Division Street, a two-bay building erected around 1895-96, and enlarged during the first decade of the twentieth century with a third floor addition.<sup>1</sup> The F. Leonard Wailes Law Office building represents law office design of the early 20th century, employing a conservative Neo-Federal aesthetic and refined detailing to suggest tradition and permanence.

The East Main Street facade is distinguished by expertly crafted round arched doorways and a segmental arched window opening, which are fitted with leaded glass transoms that recall the fan motif common to the late eighteenth century and early nineteenth century. The front is further embellished further with a finely crafted modillion cornice of tapered blocks and a Wall-of-Troy bed molding. The source of the design of the unusual tapered modillion blocks may have been the cornice of an early 19th century dwelling in adjacent Somerset County, Maryland. The symmetrical four-bay facade was inspired by the domestic rowhouse architecture common in urban areas of the Northeastern United States during the early- to mid-nineteenth century. In its hierarchy of detail, the facade perpetuates established eighteenth and nineteenth century traditions, in which architectural embellishment was reduced in areas not readily available to public view. The north facade is laid in Flemish bond; this treatment continues only for about five feet across the east elevation, changing to common bond where the adjacent commercial block obscures the wall.

The Wailes law office building represents an early work by Salisbury architect W. Twilley Malone (1884-1964). His original blue-line elevation drawings for this project are dated April 14, 1926.<sup>2</sup> In 1932, Malone entered partnership with Ralph Williams, to form the architectural firm of Malone and Williams. The firm has continued in operation under the ownership of Twilley Malone's son, John A. Malone. Prior to the Depression, Twilley Malone resided in Washington, D. C., working for the Washington Woodworking Company as a young architect trained through the International Correspondence School, which involved the home study and mastery of series of manuals. The instruction manuals remain in the hands of Twilley Malone's son, and the series covers a range of architectural and building subjects including carpentry, electric wiring, ornamental metal work, estimating building costs, builders' hardware, building stone foundations and masonry construction, etc.<sup>3</sup> William S. Lowndes, a member of the A. I. A., authored several of the textbooks and he served as director of the School of Architecture and Building Construction in the International Correspondence Schools. Despite this source of professional instruction, Twilley Malone's principal experience was gathered during his youth as a helper to his father, Peter A. Malone, a local house builder who executed a number of prominent Wicomico and Somerset county dwellings during the first decades of the twentieth century.<sup>4</sup> The firm of Malone and Williams concentrated largely on public and educational buildings. Among other major projects, the firm designed the 1936 addition to the Wicomico County Courthouse as well as the new Cecil County Courthouse, finished in 1940. A second law office, located at 126 East Main Street, was probably designed by Twilley Malone as well, but a firm attribution has not been made at this time. Twilley Malone's partner, Ralph Williams, also was a Salisbury native, and prior to his return to his home town, he worked in the architectural office of Clyde N. and Nelson Friz in Baltimore. In 1932, the firm of Malone and Williams, Architects and Builders, opened a small one-room office at the corner of Lloyd and Hanson streets, and the original structure remains in an enlarged office expanded during mid-century.<sup>5</sup>

Twilley Malone's client for the law office was attorney F. Leonard Wailes, who grew up in an adjacent house known as "Lakeside", a property located on the southeast corner of Division and East Main Street and extended to the edge of Humphreys Lake until the mill dam collapsed in 1909. The Lakeside property had been occupied by several generations of the Leonard-Wailes family. A part of the house was erected around 1803 by Ebenezer Leonard, who operated a tannery on the site. Ebenezer Leonard's daughter, Sarah Ann, married William Handy Wailes, who practiced medicine. Their son, Ebenezer, continued in the tanning business. He and his wife Annie enlarged the Lakeside house in 1882, converting it from a story-and-a-half structure to a two-and-a-half story Victorian dwelling. One of their fourteen children was F. Leonard Wailes.<sup>6</sup>

A narrow East Main Street parcel of the Lakeside property was divided from the remaining acreage in 1927 for the construction of the law office. The west elevation of the law office, which originally was unobstructed from public view, was laid in a formal Flemish bond like the front facade.

F. Leonard Wailes occupied this office, and his sister Laura served as his secretary.<sup>7</sup> Following F. Leonard Wailes' death in 1935, the law office property was retained by the Wailes family until 1959 when it was transferred to Philip A. Insley,<sup>8</sup> who practiced law out of this office for twenty years. In 1978 he sold the property to George G. Dunsten and Robert K. Cloyd.<sup>9</sup> The present owner and occupant, attorney Kenneth D. L. Gaudreau, purchased the property in 1991.<sup>10</sup>

The northern boundary follows the line of East Main Street, and the east and west boundaries are coincidental with the lot lines of adjacent properties. The south line is coincidental with the alley that provides access to the rear of the property.
