DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The date of the house's original construction is unknown. In 1854 it was purchased by James Harlan, who extensively remodeled it in 1872 or 1873, when it became the Harlan family's permanent residence. At that time Harlan had the addition erected on the west side of the house, and also had a veranda built along the front. The veranda was later removed, replaced by a small porch over the front entrance. In the 1930's a rear portion of the structure was removed.

The house is Italianate in the Venetian tradition, with triangular pediments and corner pilasters. Five four-light, double-hung windows, three on the second floor and two on the ground floor, flank the front door. A wide-bracketed cornice supports a hip roof containing a flat lantern. Twin, bracketed bay windows project from the east wall. The house is an unusual combination of Italianate form with classic and high Victorian detail.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SEE INSTRUCTIONS

James Harlan (1820-1899) was the first Iowan to hold Cabinet rank in the United States government. A leading Whig in Iowa politics after his removal to the state from Indiana in the 1840's, Harlan settled in Mount Pleasant as president of Iowa Wesleyan College in 1853. Two years later he won election to the United States Senate, where he soon shifted his allegiance to the newly formed Republican Party and became an important spokesman for western interests. During the Civil War he was one of a group of Republican Senators frequently consulted by President Lincoln, who shortly before his assassination elevated Harlan to the post of Secretary of the Interior. Harlan served in this capacity under President Andrew Johnson until mid 1866, finally resigning in protest against Johnson's Reconstruction policy. He returned to the Senate the following year to vote for Johnson's impeachment and served until defeated for re-election in 1872.

In 1868 his daughter, Mary Eunice Harlan, married Robert Todd Lincoln, son of the martyred sixteenth President, in the house at Mount Pleasant. In subsequent years Robert Lincoln and his family frequently spent their summers there. Harlan died at his home in Mount Pleasant in 1899, and in 1907 his daughter deeded the house to Iowa Wesleyan College.
