Fairfield was originally laid out in Four Squares with about 25-30 acres each. Five streets were laid out, two running northeastsouthwest, and three running northwest-southeast all the way to the beach. Newton Square contained the parsonage land for the use of the minister; Frost Square was for the Meeting House, the Court House, the School House, and a third square, Burr Square was for a military or or public park with a place for a burying ground, the fourth square contained land for the founder of the town, Roger Ludlowe. The Historic District of Fairfield includes portions of the original Four Squares. It includes all buildings bordering the Old Post Road from the Post Road to Turner Street and it includes the buildings southeast and northeast of the Town Hall on both sides of Beach Road to a point just before the Old Burying Ground which on the southwest side of Beach Road and is included in the Historic District. The total area of the district is about 35 acres.

Historically and Architecturally Interesting Buildings of the Fairfield Historical District

The Town Hall and the Town Green are the focal point of the original Four Squares. The first town house was built in 1720 and destroyed in 1779 by the British. It was rebuilt in 1794. At this time it had a five bay front with central doorway topped by a hipped roof and a cupola. About 1870 the building was remodeled in the Second Empire Style and in 1936 it was restored to its 1794 appearance (which is recorded in a woodcut of that period. Since its restoration hip roofed one story wings have been added on either side to provide additional space.

#No 1 Town Hall Green "Rising Sun Tavern" Built in 1780 by Samuel Penfield this tavern sheltered some prominent visitors in the postrevolutionary period from 1780 to 1818. It is a gambrel roofed building with five bays and additions include wings to the side and the rear, the porch, chimneys and dormer windows.

543 Old Post Road The Silliman House. This building was built in 1791 by Major William Silliman, son of General Gold Sellect Silliman who was in charge of the troops guarding Fairfield in 1779. It has a two chimney central hallway plan and an elaborate porch with a flared curved roof supported by slender columns. There are additions to the side and rear of the house.

The Fairfield Academy which became known as the Old Academy has been moved from its original site to its present position S.E. of sity hall. It is distinguished by a cupola on the roof and by small circular windows in the gables as well as by a dominant gabled section which projects somewhat from the facade.

249 Beach Road This house has a central chimney plan with later additions to the rear and side. It survived the British raid of 1779

The Fairfield Historic District includes approximately 75 buildings in a variety of architectural styles. These range from the limited number of pre-revolutionary houses which survived the burning of the town by the British to and including a Romanesque library built in 1890 and a variety of Victorian Residences. All of the buildings taken together form a totality the richness of which eludes attempts at documentation, but which is comprised of the complex relationships of open and closed spaces and the counterpoint within and between differing architectural styles. Thus the Fairfield Historic District is significant because it is an impressive and aesthetically pleasing totality, and it is also significant from an historical point of view because it was the focal point of the first English settlement in the area and an important British target during the Revolutionary War.

After the conclusion of the Pequot war in 1637 when the a rea appeared secure from further Indian warfare Roger Ludlowe and a small group of Englishmen purchased a large expanse of land from the Indians which consisted of present day Fairfield, Greens Farms, Redding, Weston, Easton and the western section of Bridgeport. At that time the area was called Uncowaye meaning "looking forward -- a valley," and at the time of settlement had belonged to the Pequonnock Indians. The Four Squares area which comprises the major part of the Historic District was laid out immediately after the purchase of lands, and the earliest development of the town of Fairfield took place there.

During the Revolutionary War Fairfield became a British target in part because it was the center of whaleboat warfare along the sound. In July of 1779 General Tryon attacked the town and in two days Hessians burned two hundred houses and all public buildings. When Washington passed through the town on his presidential tour in 1789 he recorded in his diary that "The Destructive evidences of British cruelty are yet visible both in Norwalk and Fairfield."
