Nineteenth Century Residential Buildings in Phoenix

name of multiple property listing

Description

The George E. Cisney House was constructed in ca. 1897 by its original owner, G.E. Cisney. The building is constructed in the Colonial Revival architectural style and represents the Builder's Plan Book property type. It retains integrity of design, materials, workmanship, and setting. It has been utilized as a single family dwelling from ca. 1897 to the present day.

The George E. Cisney House is located in Lot 65 of the Highland subdivision of the Dennis Addition. The Dennis Addition was originally platted in 1883. The building faces south onto East Roosevelt Street. The streetscape along East Roosevelt Street is characterized by modest, working class historic and contemporary residences. No outbuildings are located on the site.

The George E. Cisney House is a square, one and one-half story building of brick construction. The building measures 40 x 50 feet. The steeply pitched hip roof features multiple hipped roof dormers and is covered with asphalt shingles. The original brick walls have been sheathed with stucco. It has a stone foundation.

Exterior features include a deep veranda on the front and west sides with masonry piers. Wood double hung windows are located discretely along the walls. Two opposing windows at the principal facades are fixed wood sash with leaded glass top lites. The central entry features a glazed wood panel door with side lites and transom. The facade dormer features a door and side windows leading to a balcony above the veranda. Important architectural elements include brick denticulation below the boxed cornice eaves, wood brackets along the veranda eaves, corbelled chimney, and decorative glass.

Alterations include modification of the porch headers to a stuccoed arch configuration (ca. 1930) and the application of stucco on the original brick. The house is in good condition.

Statement of Significance

The George E. Cisney House is significant under Criteria C under the area of significance of Architecture. It is representative of the historic context "Residential Architecture in Phoenix Prior to 1901." Built in ca. 1897 and constructed in the Colonial Revival architectural style, the George E. Cisney House is representative of the Builder's Plan Book property type. The George E. Cisney House is also important in the area of Community Planning. As one of only nine nineteenth century buildings remaining in the Dennis Addition, which was originally platted in 1883, the George E. Cisney House represents a rare survivor of its period and the historic context "Nineteenth Century Community Development in Phoenix."

A popular architectural style used during the plan book era was the Colonial Revival style. The use of the style in residential architecture was wide spread in the late nineteenth century. Closely followed copies of plan book examples of the style, as demonstrated by the George E. Cisney House, were once common. The house illustrates a local interpretation of the plan book designs that resulted in an elaborately detailed building which incorporates the major stylistic concepts of Colonial architecture. With the exception of the stucco application over the brick walls, the Colonial Revival inspired design of the E. W. Skinner House remains intact. Stylistic features include its overall square plan, attention to symmetry in its massing and facade design, and the use of boxed cornice detailing at the eaves, further accented with eave brackets at the veranda and dentils at the sidewalls. The stylistically typical facade length veranda is used in the house design and the oversized dormers on each roof plane emphasize symmetry, as well as scale. The house also features the use of molding and trim in classical shapes, leaded glass windows, and raised panel, glazed doors.

Built by local contractor George E. Cisney as his own residence, the house is a specific example of a builder's reliance on plan book designs in local residential construction.
