DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Begun in 1854 and completed in 1857, Magnolia Manor was built by John B. McDaniel.

The plan is ell-shaped and there are two entrances; the major entrance opens into a gracious central hall and the secondary one into a small foyer leading to a sitting room.

The foundations of this two-storey home are brick and the walls are of wood frame construction. The siding is horizontal lapped with wide (2' - 0") corner pilasters, characteristic of the Greek Revival style, terminating in a plain, 2' - 0" wide frieze.

The roof is hipped with a central ridge. There is a continuous overhang of two feet supported by scrollwork brackets 2' - 0" on center.

On the east facade, the entrance is protected by a one-storey porch, the roof of which forms a deck at the second floor level. The porch roof has a moulded box cornice projecting two feet, supported by carved brackets spaced 2' - 4" on center. The brackets spring from a flat frieze and architrave supported by hexagonal columns. The columns rest on hexagonal pedestals, and have ornate, moulded capitals. The entrance on the south facade is protected by a similar but smaller porch. The deck railings are flat open scrollwork balusters terminating in square newels capped by turned vase-like finials. The deck is roofed with copper bearing soldered sheet metal.

The west entry is within an architrave consisting of pilasters with moulded base and cap and moulded frieze above. There is a five-light transom the full width of the opening and five-light sidelights each side of the door opening. The single door has raised panels below and four lights above.

The windows are double-hung with a pattern of 6" x 6" lights. The side surrounds are flat and the head surrounds are carved, projecting entablatures.

There are three main brick chimneys which have been stuccoed. The chimney is terminated by bell cast shaped corbeling.

7. Description

The main stairs in the central entrance hallway are open stringed with moulded nosings. The balusters are finely turned, two per tread, and terminate in a turned newel. The stairs are straight and reversed in plan.

In 1933, Senator and Mrs. Fletcher McElhannon made some additions to Magnolia Manor. A garage with a bedroom over was added to the rear (west) and a porch was enclosed and a new one extended on the west portion of the front (east) ell.

The present owner, Senator Olen Hendrix, plans to remove the 1933 additions, and restore the house to its 1857 configuration.

Upon completion of the restoration work, Senator and Mrs. Hendrix will make Magnolia Manor their permanent residence.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Architecturally, Magnolia Manor is an excellently preserved example of a building type found in widely scattered locations of the state. The significance lies in the plan configuration which is ell-shaped with two entrances. It has only one central hall, however, indicating that the east entrance is the principal one.

There are Greek Revival characteristics in the corner boards, the entrance architraves, the flanking pilasters and the window surrounds. The roof overhang and supporting bracketing, and the portico detailing reflect influences of early Italianate characteristics.

By the time the Arkansas Territory had become a state, a few early residents had become sufficiently affluent to erect large homes. John B. McDaniel was one of these.

Originally from South Carolina, it is not certain when he was born, but it was probably about 1810. We do know that his future wife, Mary Ann Thomas, was born in Marlboro County, South Carolina, in 1818. Their fathers had campaigned together in the American Revolution and John and Mary McDaniel attended a community school together.

Sometime prior to 1836, John McDaniel acquired a plantation in Marion County on the Peedee River near Harlsville, South Carolina. In 1836 John and Mary Ann McDaniel were married at Mount Washington, her parents home. They settled near Harlsville on the McDaniel Plantation. It was during this period that their three sons and two daughters were born.

By 1850 McDaniel had succumbed to the lure of the frontier, sold his plantation and prepared to move to

8. Significance

Arkadelphia. In December, he left by wagon train with his sons, John, who became a prominent doctor, and James, who was killed in the Civil War, and Eli. The following June, Mary Ann McDaniel and her two daughters followed the men by wagon train, arriving in Arkadelphia late in the summer of 1850. Mrs. McDaniel remained there until her death early in January of 1883.

John McDaniel induced Madison Griffin, a master bricklayer, carpenter and builder, to accompany him to Arkadelphia. In 1854 McDaniel placed the construction of his mansion, which was completed in 1857, in Griffin's able hands. Madison Griffin supervised the McDaniel slaves in forming and firing the brick for the foundation and chimneys. He had the slaves fell large oaks and the logs hewn for the supporting beams and joists. The pine for flooring was cut two inches thick and the interior walnut was milled locally. For the finer wood trim, Madison Griffin sent all the way to Little Rock.

By the end of the first quarter of this century, the McDaniel mansion had fallen into disrepair. Fortunately, in 1929, the late State Senator and Mrs. Fletcher McElhannon purchased the property. Mrs. McElhannon, feeling the estate needed a name more descriptive of its appearance, renamed the property "Magnolia Manor" after a huge Magnolia tree located near the front door.

In 1932, the McElhannons embarked on an extensive program of restoration and by 1933, Magnolia Manor was once again one of the grand homes of Southern Arkansas.

The home is now owned by State Senator Olen Hendrix of Prescott, Arkansas, who plans to remove additions made by the McElhannons in 1933, and restore Magnolia Manor to its 1857 condition.
