The Delhi Municipal Baseball Park includes a wooden grandstand and accompanying playing field. Built in 1948, the facility occupies part of a large block near the small town's old business district. Abutting the baseball park (but not part of this nomination) are livestock judging barns from about the same period. With the exception of more recent vintage dugouts and the loss of the original board fence, the facility looks much as it did when dedicated.

The basically V-shaped grandstand has viewing stands to each side. A section at the center houses a box for the announcer and scorekeeper with a small concession stand below. The wooden grandstand rests on concrete blocks. A metal roof provides protection from the elements. (Some of the roofing material is missing due to a recent storm.) Originally there were traditional below ground dugouts; today there are two small wooden shelters. (These two sheds are not being included in the count because they are not "substantial in size and scale.")

The playing field is grassy except for the areas where players run from base to base, the pitcher's mound, and the batter's box. The baseball park is now enclosed by a chain link fence which roughly follows the location of the original wooden board fence. A chief novelty of the field when dedicated in 1948 was that it was equipped with lights for night games. The creosote posts remain, although the lighting devices are modern.

Non-contributing Element:

Immediately behind the grandstand (see map) is a small frame restroom building. Because it is believed to be less than fifty years old, it is being counted as a non-contributing element.

The Delhi Municipal Baseball Park is of local historical significance because its construction in 1948 was a major event in the small town's recreational history, as detailed in newspaper coverage at the time. It was the community's first permanent baseball facility and the first to provide lighting for night games.

To fully appreciate the significance of the Delhi Baseball Park, one must remember that in small town, rural America sporting events were a major source of recreation and entertainment – especially baseball, the quintessential American sport. Delhi is in the Northeast Louisiana delta, a very rural region where cotton was and is king. In 1950 there was one city (Monroe, with about 41,000), Tallulah with about 8,000, and numerous small towns under 5,000. Delhi in 1950 had a population of 1,861; the parish seat of Rayville, about 3,000. It is clear from the local paper, The Delhi Dispatch, that amateur baseball competition was fierce among the various towns and that acquiring a permanent baseball facility with bleachers and lighting in 1948 was an event of considerable magnitude in the life of the town. News chronicling the development of the baseball park was typically in a prominent place on the front page.

Coverage began in March 1948 when the Delhi Baseball Club, Inc. was chartered for the purpose of securing the town's team, the Delhi Oilers, an up-to-date grandstand with lighting for night games. The Oilers were in a six team amateur league and played two games a week for a total schedule of 40 games per season. Previously the Oilers played home games in a field with no seating accommodations and certainly no ability to play night games. The club issued stock to be purchased by citizens at $10 per share, with profits from gate receipts to be used to retire the stock. The corporation charter for the Delhi Baseball Club, Inc. was filed in late March 1948 as soon as the first 200 shares of stock had been paid for, a requirement set up by the group's attorneys. Formed by local citizens, its president was Dr. Sheldon Teer. A large ad in the April 14 paper with the heading "BUY NOW" read in part: "Your money will be used to pay for permanent improvements that will be used and enjoyed by Delhi people and visitors to Delhi for many years. . . . About $4,000 worth of stock has been subscribed and PAID FOR. But more money is NEEDED. . . . Delhi can afford – and deserves – an up-to-date, adequately lighted baseball field where young and old can see high-class, amateur ball games on weekday nights. . . . Other towns are getting facilities of the type planned for Delhi – is Delhi to take a back seat?" The message was paid for "in the interest of progress for Delhi" by five local businesses and one individual.

By the April 28, 1948 issue of the Dispatch the stock drive must have been successful, for work was underway on Delhi's "modern, new baseball field," with completion expected in three weeks. Dr. Teer boasted that "Delhi is the only town of its size in North Louisiana which will have an elaborate baseball field for amateur ball." The first daytime game was played there in late May. The first night game was later than planned because of a delay in getting all the lighting equipment in place. Delhi's "first night game in history" (as it was described in the paper) occurred on July 15.

A front page story in July boasted that a "capacity crowd" was expected for the formal opening and dedication of the park on July 20, "when the Oilers attempt to take the measure of the vaunted Winnsboro Red Sox. . . . Nearly 2,000 comfortable grandstand seats will be available for ball fans from Rayville, Tallulah, Oak Grove and other neighboring towns who are expected to see the Oilers dedicate the new park and facilities recently completed at a cost of $12,000." Standard prices (50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children) were to be in effect for dedication night.

Baseball parks with covered wooden grandstands such as the one dedicated in Delhi in 1948 were once a common feature of small town America – before they were superseded by metal bleachers. Baseball fans in Delhi supporting this nomination remember when every town of any size in Northeast Louisiana had a baseball park like theirs. As far as anyone can determine, this is the only survivor in the region.
