The Whitney Mansion was designed by John Notman, Architect, and built in 1849. Minor interior alterations have been done to the house in the 19th and 20th centuries.

- 1. Exterior: The exterior of the house is a handsome dark brown New Jersey ironstone (coursed rubble) with red mortar pointing and brownstone trim including window sills. The house is in the Italian Villa style and is two-and-a-half stories with a fourstory tower. The roofs are gable, covered with asphalt shingles and with a small section of flat roof covered with metal, and a hipped roof on the tower. Delicate wood brackets support the wide overhanging ends of the gable roofs and the main entryway roof, which is partly supported by grape cluster cast iron brackets. Grape clusters in cast iron also support the curving metal roofs of the front and rear porches. There are French windows on the first floor and casement windows in the upper floors. An exterior datestone near the upper doorway of the tower is inscribed "Thomas H. Whitney A.D. 1849."
- 2. Interior: The entry at the base of the tower leads into a vestibule with painted glass flanking the entry doors. A large entry hallway, with a niche containing what is reported to be its original piece of sculpture, and a monumental stairway with wide mahogany rail, has a fine cornice with large paired plaster brackets. To the left is the main living room and beyond it, the study. To the right is the drawing room. All these rooms have decorative plaster cornices of acanthus leaves in different motifs. To the rear of the hallway is a new lavatory and a dining room with French windows in the polygonal end of the room. In the rear is a moderate-sized three-story kitchen wing with modern kitchen, enclosed porch, recreation room, and back stairway. The second floor has six bedrooms and the third floor in the kitchen wing has three bedrooms. The original water tank is still in the third floor of the tower.
- 3. Site: The Whitney Mansion, now the residence of the President of Glassboro State College, is located just west of Whitney Avenue on the east side of the campus of Glassboro State College. An asphalt drive leads into the property to the south and rear of the house and curves around the front and west side of the house. The lawn stretches out in front of the house to the northeast, and there are many fine shade trees and evergreens on the front lawn.

This early Victorian mansion was the scene of the Glassboro Conference between United States President Lyndon B. Johnson and Soviet Premier Alexi N. Kosygin held on June 23rd and 25, 1967. These talks were the beginning of a meaningful East-West dialogue on a number of international questions, particularly an exchange of views on the question of direct bilateral relations.

The house was built by Thomas H. Whitney, who founded Whitney Brothers Glass Plant, was active in banking, and President and Director of the Glassboro-Millville Railroad. In 1841-1842 he served two terms in the New Jersey Assembly. He was the Whig Party candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives in 1850. His brother Samuel and widowed mother also lived in the house. Thomas was married four years after its completion.

By December 1, 1917, the State of New Jersey had title to the Whitney Mansion and fifty-five additional acres. Here was founded the New Jersey State Normal School at Glassboro which began operations in 1923. In 1935 the name was changed to Glassboro State Teachers College, and more recently to Glassboro State College.

The house is an excellent example of mid-nineteenth century domestic architecture of the Italian Villa style. This style was one of several eclectic styles popular in the middle of the 19th century. John Notman, the architect of this house, also designed other notable Italian Villa style houses in Burlington and Princeton, as well as many churches and public buildings. While not so robust as these later examples of Notman's work, it has good exterior proportions, and a handsome color with red pointing, and generous interior rooms.
