INTRODUCTION

SETTING – Sparta, Wisconsin

Sparta, Monroe County, is located in west central Wisconsin. The two major communities in Monroe County are Tomah, in the eastern part of the county, and Sparta, in the western part of the county. Though Sparta is slightly smaller than Tomah, with a 2000 population of 8,648, is the Monroe county seat.

The House

The William G. and Anne Williams House is located a few blocks northeast of the core commercial district of Sparta in a residential neighborhood marked by mostly large, comfortable late nineteenth and early twentieth century homes and large, mature trees. Located at the northwest corner of E. Franklin and N. Benton streets, the Williams House is set on a slightly elevated lot, with large, mature trees in front, facing E. Williams Street, as well as on the side, facing N. Benton Street. There is a small house immediately west of the house, other larger houses to the east, north and southeast, and the former Sparta High School (now a charter school and school administration) to the south of the house. Though close to the downtown, the street has an older, residential feel to it.

The Williams House is situated close to the front of the lot, facing south. There is some lawn on either side of the house, and a larger back yard area, with the carriage house in the northwest corner of the lot. A driveway comes off of N. Benton Street, to the east, toward the carriage house.

The Williams House is a two and one half story, frame, cross gabled Queen Anne style house. The siding is clapboard, with large porches and other decorative features to exhibit the Queen Anne style. The front façade, which faces south toward E. Franklin Street, features a flat roofed, one story, full-width porch which sits on a rough cut limestone foundation and is supported by four wood and plaster Ionic columns. The floor of the porch is painted wood, and the ceiling is beaded board. The metal rails, which connect each of the columns, are hand wrought. There is a small dentil design around the cornice of the porch. The roof of the porch is surrounded by short square posts that are capped with decorative finials, and connected by metal, decorative railing. The railings are original to the house; they are visible in a circa 1900 photograph.

The façade of the building is slightly asymmetrical in its location of openings. The front door that is slightly offset to the left, with large windows on either side, on the first floor. The second floor features a small, center window, with a double one-over-one sash on the right (east) side, and a triple

The third story window, which is in the gable peak, is a three part window also employing the Palladian motif. It is set inside a small balcony, which is flush with the wall surface. The balcony has a short wood rail with spindles, and two pilasters, and two posts. There is a round half arch window above the balcony and inset into the balcony is a three part one-over-one sash window set. The cornice is simple, and an unadorned frieze board flanks the entire gable.

The east side of the house exhibits some of the irregular floor plan, with the way the wall juts out into a large bay in the center area, and features a small, open side porch. The rear/north side of the building is simple, with a one story enclosed porch/entryway with a flat roof, which is ornamented with a simple, iron rail. Two sash windows are on the second story, and a single, tripartite set of windows is in the gable. A door is at ground level on the west side of the north façade, which is an entrance into the basement level.

The west façade is irregular, with a three story, three sided projection from the otherwise flat wall. Within this three sided bay are the beveled glass dining room windows on the first floor, sash windows on the second floor, and a three sided, conical type roof on the third level, with windows on each side. A large art glass window, which is on the main stairway, is also visible from the west façade.

The house is entered from the south (Franklin Street) façade by stepping up onto the façade-width open porch, and entering through the centrally located door into a vestibule with small ceramic tiles on the floor. A second door allows the visitor into the house, into a small sitting area at the base of the grand staircase. Two sets of pocket-doors on the right allow the visitor into the front parlor, and a rear private living area. The dining room is at the end of the hallway, and behind the dining room is the kitchen.

The floors in the house are all hardwood. The pocket doors are in perfect working condition. The fireplace in the rear living room is surrounded with glazed tile, with a classical revival motif, including carved columns and a beveled mirror above the fireplace. The dining room features parquet floors, a built in china cabinet, and original brass light fixture hanging from the ceiling. The kitchen has been modernized, though in the original location.

The staircase is highly decorative, with turned spindles and finials on the newel posts, and swag designs on the newels. On the first landing is a large art glass window with a crest design. The stair turns to take the visitor up to the second floor, which opens onto a hallway. There are five bedrooms on the second floor. Small bathrooms have been built into each room to accommodate the house's current function as a bed and breakfast. A fireplace is located in the central bedroom; it is similar to the fireplace on the first floor in the living room.

The third floor is accessed through a rear, enclosed stairwell. The current owner's family lives on the third floor, which has been remodeled to accommodate that function.

The Carriage House (contributing)

The carriage house, which is contemporary with the Williams House, is located in the northwest corner of the rectangular lot, to the northwest of the house. It faces N. Benton Street. It is a one and one-half story front gable, frame structure, with double doors on the east façade, and a small, square window in the gable. There is an entry door on the south façade, as well as another small window. The carriage house appears to be in good condition, with a hay loft on the second level, and room for a few horses (and one modern car) on the first level. The carriage house is a contributing building to the property.

Overall, the house and carriage house retain a high degree of physical integrity, particularly in the more public portions of the house, including the parlor, living room, dining room, and front stairway. The exterior also retains an exceedingly high degree of integrity.

INTRODUCTION – Statement of Significance

The William G. and Anne Williams House at 220 E. Franklin Street in Sparta, Monroe County, Wisconsin, is a two and one-half story clapboard Queen Anne style house completed circa 1900.<sup>1</sup> The house was designed by well-known La Crosse, Wisconsin architects Stoltze and Schick, and is one of the best representatives of the late Queen Anne style located in Sparta. Thus, it is eligible at the local level for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C for its architectural significance.

Background: Sparta, Wisconsin History

Sparta, Wisconsin, the county seat of Monroe County, in west central Wisconsin. Sparta is located in the west central part of the county. Located near the headwaters of the La Crosse River, which flows westerly toward the Mississippi River, Sparta was first claimed by Euro-Americans in 1849, because of the fertile land and the waterpower potential the La Crosse River provided. By summer 1851, a man named William Petit built the first house, a log cabin, at present-day Sparta.

Willam G. Williams

William Griffith Williams was born on February 16, 1848 in Kingston Township, Green Lake County, Wisconsin. His parents, Robert and Margaret (Griffith) Williams, came to the United States from Wales in 1845, and first settled in Green Lake County, Wisconsin Territory, where they farmed and Robert was a local clergyman. They were amongst the first settlers in that part of the country, three years prior to Wisconsin statehood. They had at least five children, the eldest of whom was William G. Williams.

W.G. Williams received his early education in Dodge County (Wisconsin) public schools, until his parents moved to Angelo Township in Monroe County in 1859. As W.G. Williams grew into adulthood, he became one of Monroe County's leading citizens. He served as Monroe County register of deeds for two terms, and also held the position of clerk in the state land office in Madison for a few years. In 1894 he became one of a group of organizers of the Monroe County Bank, and held the position of vice president of that bank for nearly the next twenty years, until his retirement. He also served as the president of the State Banking Association and aided in the formation of several other banks in Wisconsin and the Midwest.

<sup>1</sup> The Williams purchased the parcel in 1890, but surviving records indicate that the house was not built for another ten years. A family member revealed that perhaps the house took a little longer to build because the Williams' commercial building was constructed in 1896, and it took precedence over the house construction. Schick and Stoltze designed both buildings.

W. G. Williams married Miss Anne Jones, daughter of Stephen Jones of Adrian, Monroe County, on November 2, 1875. They were married for forty-two years at the time of his death on November 28, 1917. W. G. and Anne Williams had seven children during their marriage. Amos, born in 1876, died two years later. Margaret, born in 1877, died at the age of 19 in 1897. Robert Stanley, born 1891, died at age 2. Everett Lyle (1881), Ethel May (1885), Ralph Stephen (1891) and Eunice Blodwyn (1893) all lived well into their adult years, outliving their parents.

The William G. Williams House

W. G. Williams, in 1891, retained La Crosse architects Hugo Schick and Gustav Stoltze to design his house on the northwest corner of E. Franklin and N. Benton streets in Sparta, a few blocks northeast from the central business district. They designed a wood frame Queen Anne style house with Classical details, which was highly popular at that time. Schick and Stoltze were well-versed in the Queen Anne style, as many of their houses and commercial buildings represented this style. For reasons that are unclear at this time, the house took approximately ten years to be built. The house was completed about 1900 and the family moved into the house in 1901.

The building specs called for building trenches, a deep concreted floored basement, stone walls made with properly slaked limestone mortar, and brick lined basement walls. Lathe and plaster was applied throughout the house, including the attic rooms. The floors were indicated, according to the specs, to be kiln dried hard maple flooring. White oak and curly birch wood were specified for the woodwork on the first story. The bedroom over the parlor was specified to be finished with birdseye maple.

The house's features, which are typical of the late Queen Anne style, are the somewhat irregular massing, asymmetrical window and door placements, multiple gable roofs intersecting and with a five-sided conical shaped roof on the west side, a rounded bay window on the east side, and three open porches. Windows range from sash to Palladian style rounded top windows, as well as the three-part rounded bay window. Interior features, such as pocket doors, elaborate stair and newel posts, parquet floors, art glass window in the front stairwell, decorative fireplace mantels on two floors, and built-in dining room cabinetry are all typical features.

The Williams House, though not the only Queen Anne style house in Sparta, is arguably one of the best examples. Other examples of the Queen Anne style in Sparta include the R. S. Doge House at 217 N.

Spring Street, built in 1890. The house is associated with R.S. Dodge, a prominent businessman in Sparta; however, the house has been altered and does not meet National Register eligibility under Criterion C. The B.E. McCoy House at 421 E. Oak Street was constructed in 1876 in the Greek Revival style, with alterations made in 1910 in the Queen Anne style. However, it had been altered in subsequent years, and thus does not meet National Register Criterion C qualifications. In a similar mode, the Queen Anne style O.L. Irvin House, constructed in 1893, is associated with a locally prominent lumber baron; however, with alterations, such as enclosed porches and replacement windows, it does not retain sufficient integrity to be considered eligible under Criterion C.

Architects – Schick & Stoltze

Architects Schick & Stoltze of LaCrosse, Wisconsin designed the W.G. and Anne Williams House. The partnership of Hugo Schick and Gustav Stoltze lasted from 1887 to 1899, and together they designed dozens of residential, commercial and religious properties in west central Wisconsin. Their extant buildings reflect stylistic preferences from Romanesque Revival to Neo-Classical styles, to Early Modern styles, as well as Queen Anne.<sup>2</sup>

Gustav Stoltze was a German immigrant who arrived in the United States in 1872, and received his architectural education in Boston. He came to La Crosse in 1885, after work in Boston and Minneapolis. Hugo Schick was an immigrant from Austria, graduating from the Polytechnical School and Academy of Arts in Vienna in 1877. Schick came to the United States in 1880, working for awhile in New York City, Chicago and Minneapolis before finally coming to La Crosse in 1886. By 1887, Schick was in partnership with Stoltze, which they maintained in La Crosse until 1899.<sup>3</sup>

The W.G. Williams House may have been designed by Schick & Stoltze as early as 1891. Though the house was not completed until 1900, shortly after the Schick & Stoltze partnership dissolved, it is a good example of their residential architecture. Examples in the city of La Crosse of Schick & Stoltze wood frame Queen Anne style houses include the Bentley-Wheeler House at 950-952 Cass Street (before 1891), the Stephen Gantert House at 1304 Main Street (1891) and the J. L. Callahan House, 933 Rose Street (1894).

Schick and Stoltze also designed the Williams Block at 125 S. Water Street in Sparta, just a few blocks from the Williams House. The Williams Block is a red brick Queen Anne Commercial style two-story building, with a corner round turret as its main decorative feature. The Williams Block was listed on the National Register of Historic Places as a contributing building in the Sparta Commercial Historic District.

The W.G. Williams House and its accompanying carriage house are excellent examples of the Queen Anne style in Sparta, and the Classical features on the house are reflective of the late 19th/early 20th century trends in the Queen Anne style. Being designed by prominent western Wisconsin architects Schick and Stoltze increases the building's importance as architecturally fine examples within their style. Completed about 1900, the W.G. Williams House displays high levels of physical integrity both outside and inside, and meets the qualifications for National Register eligibility locally under Criterion C – Architecture.
