	DESCRIBE THE OF	FEEDLY AND OR	CINIA: (if Im	mm) DIIVOIOA

A two-story, wood frame, single-family dwelling, set back from the street. This building retains an air of spaciousness which belies its modest dimensions. Italianate, with Doric columns and ornamentation, this house demonstrates the possibility of gracious exterior spatial planning in architecture upon a rather narrow San Francisco lot. The lines are simple and strong with some emphasis on the curvilinear pattern of the windows.

A two-story angle bay window accentuates the right side of the facade as seen by an observer facing the structure and is balanced by the tall porch and columns flanking the entrance on the left side.

The fenestration provides the most distinctive feature of the house and gives an elegant restrained character and unity to the building. Medium width round-arched windows, without any pairing, stand on each face of the bay at each floor level. Double-hung, they are surrounded by striated mouldings reminiscent of the Medieval Gothic doorways of French cathedrals. The upper story windows have ornaments centered above the windows, breaking the lines of striation. These ornaments are composed of a dominant fleur de lis with a triple scroll below, centered on the wavy and offset striation lines of the mouldings. Oblong inset panels face the lower parts of the bays below the windows.

The porch and entrance are deep and imposing. Pairs of columns of the Doric order--the inner ones engaged-- are fluted with simple caps and support a porch roof composed of an architrave with triglyphs, in turn surmounted by a strong projecting dentillated wood cornice. The entrance doorway of a single leaf door with a large single pane, is surmounted by a semicircular (lunette) window which echoes the semicircular arch design of the entranceway.

The shallow-pitched roof projects over the facade, forming a cornice, which is also dentillated by brackets similar to the porch roof.

The facade is formed of flat boards, rusticated with incised joints. The corners are marked with wide, flat pilasters extending the full height of the house and decorated with simple lines and geometric designs and with a spherical piece of trim at the center.

The wide porch stairs of concrete flow down from the doorway to the street, widening as they proceed. The low concrete garden wall is rough-cast to simulate stone and has a coping, smooth-finished. A wood lath screen fence with door of the same woodscreen, protects the side yard to the left of the entrance.

Although many absentee landlords owned this Victorian structure in the land of the land outside. This lovely, so Victorian is to be moved to become one of a row of Victorians on Scott Street at Ellis Street.
