Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Located approximately three miles east of downtown Memphis, Tennessee (pop. 667,150), the Evergreen Historic District is comprised of 1366 primarily residential buildings dating from the 1890's to the 1930's. Although a majority of the residences are Bungalows and Four-Squares of brick, stone, and stucco, there are excellent examples of Colonial Revival, Beaux Arts, Mediterranean, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival houses. Mostly constructed between 1902 and 1925, the buildings are mainly in excellent to good condition. Only 74 of the structures are non-contributing, primarily due to being less than fifty years old. The landscaping of the district gives the area a cohesive, lush character with large lots, deep and uniform set-backs, and mature trees and shrubs.

Containing 53 blocks, the boundaries of the Evergreen Historic District are clearly distinguished by the tree-lined boulevard, North Parkway, by the city's Overton Park, by the major commercial artery, Poplar Avenue, and by the quiet residential street of N. Watkins, parallel to busy Cleveland Avenue. The district also contains an adjacent area of similar architecture and history, bounded by Poplar, Willett, Court, and Stonewall. Also included within the boundaries of the nominated neighborhood is the Stonewall Place Historic District, previously listed on the National Register in 1981.

The historical development of the neighborhood is evident in the rows of small frame, one-story cottages on Watkins from the 1900's; the large stucco and brick residences on Overton Park Avenue in a variety of early-twentieth-century styles; and the multiple-story Tudor Revival apartment buildings on Poplar Avenue. As laid out at the turn of the century, the district's streets form a simple grid pattern with concrete curbs and sidewalks. Through the careful maintenance of its houses and wooden lots, the Evergreen area has retained its historical and architectural integrity to a very high degree.

Forming the largest number of buildings in the district, the Bungalows and Four-Squares exhibit a wide variety of details, materials, and formal architectural influences. The Bungalows are commonly one-and-a-half story, brick buildings with low pitched gable roofs, wide eaves, and shed-roofed dormers, and with deep porches having battered piers of stone, brick, or wood. Like the Bungalows in the district, the Four-Squares illustrate the early-twentieth-century architectural concern with the clear and simple expression of material, form and function. The district's large residences in these two styles often show Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, and Mediterranean architectural details.

In addition to Bungalows and Four-Squares, the Evergreen Historic District has outstanding local examples of houses designed principally in the Beaux Arts, Georgian Revival, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Mediterranean styles. Among the architecturally important non-residential buildings in the district are Snowden School (1910) in the Beaux Arts style and Trinity United Methodist Church (1925) in a late Gothic design.

Under the direction of Janis Foster, an architectural survey of the Evergreen Historic District was conducted during 1983 and 1984 by volunteers from the neighborhood organization, Mid-Memphis Neighborhood Association and by students of Professor Marius Carriere from Christian Brothers College. During the survey each building was inspected and researched to determine its importance to the district. Dr. Barbara Frankle researched and compiled the historical material for the nomination. The information was gathered at the Memphis Public Library and from interviews with past and present neighborhood residents and local historians. Information from the survey and historical research was used to determine the boundaries of the historical district. The nomination was edited by Lloyd Ostby.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Evergreen Historic District is nominated under National Register criteria A,B, and C for its important collection of architectural styles from 1890 to 1930, its significance in the general residential development of Memphis, and its association with locally prominent citizens during the early twentieth century. A low density early-twentieth-century residential area, the district substantially retains the qualities of architectural and landscape design which have made it a popular community since its inception. Together with other nearby Mid-town neighborhoods, such as Central Gardens (NR), Annesdale-Snowden (NR), Annesdale Park (NR), and South Parkway-Heiskell Farm (NR), the Evergreen Historic District comprises the largest cohesive collection of early-twentieth-century houses in the Mid-South. Of these historic districts, Evergreen is the largest in area and the second largest in number of buildings and contains within its borders the Stonewall Historic District (NR) and the Galloway House (NR). Evergreen is also tied historically and architecturally with two other National Register properties, Overton Park and Southwestern at Memphis (Rhodes College) and with the overall City Beautiful movement in Memphis which contributed to the development of the city's Parkway system which encircled the boundaries of the city during the early twentieth century. The houses in the Evergreen Historic District are excellent examples of the building styles popular during the first three decades of the twentieth century, including Four-Square, Georgian Revival Bungalow, Beaux Arts, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival. These residences are deeply set back on landscaped tree-lined streets which give a natural cohesive character to the district. The neighborhood since its beginning has attracted some of the city's most prominent citizens among them conservationist Robert Galloway (1851-1920), author Richard Haliburton (1900-1939), architects George Mahan (1863-1938), Max Furbringer (1864-1929) and George Awsumb (1872-1945) and Memphis Mayor William Ingram (1908-).

Prior to 1900 only one residential development lay within the Evergreen Historic District, the Winchester subdivision on present-day Willett Street which was begun in 1890. With the city's purchase of Lea Woods as the site for Overton Park, a housing boom began in the area which lasted from 1902 to 1925. The first of the new developments was the Lamb-Lenox subdivision of 1902, bounded by Speedway (North Parkway), Dickinson, Galloway, and Evergreen. A year later Robert Galloway opened a larger area for residential development, the Evergreen subdivision with its original boundaries being roughly North Parkway, McLean, Poplar and Dickinson.

New residential construction continued with several other subdivisions: Carruthers (1903), including Beard, Lawrence and Carruthers between Evergreen and Dickinson; Willodine (1904), on McNeil from Poplar to Overton Park Avenue; Stonewall Place (1909), on Stonewall from Poplar to Overton Park Avenue and later extended to North Parkway; Buena Vista Terrace (1910), on Buena Vista from Poplar to Overton Park Avenue; Clark Place (1910), on Clark from Poplar to Court; and Avalon Heights (1911), bounded by North Parkway, Avalon, Poplar, and Dickinson. Smaller subdivisions were interspersed with these larger developments and construction continued at a high level until the mid-1920's.

Two key factors in the rapid growth of the Evergreen Historic District were the expansion of streetcar service and the building of the Parkway system. By the early twentieth century, the trolley lines of the Memphis Street Railway Company connected the district to downtown Memphis along Poplar Avenue and further east along Galloway Street through Overton Park all the way to suburban Raleigh Springs. With additional shorter streetcar lines providing service to other sections of the district, the families of the Evergreen area could reach any part of the city easily and cheaply. The district's other major element was the Memphis Parkway system. After consultations in 1900 with the famous Olmsted Firm of Boston, the Memphis Park Commission hired the nationally prominent landscape architect George E. Kessler (1869-1934) to design Overton Park and Riverside Park and the three-lined boulevards, the Parkways, to connect the parks.

Today reflecting the City Beautiful and the Greenbelt concepts which shaped the original design of the district, the contributing buildings represent the architectural styles popular in the first three decades of this century. Bungalows and Four-Squares of brick, stucco and stone predominate, but there is sufficient diversity of design, materials and ornamentation within these two styles to create considerable variety. Also represented in the district are outstanding examples of Colonial Revival, Beaux Arts, Mediterranean, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival houses. The craftsmanship stressed in early-twentieth-century design is evidenced in such architectural details as leaded and stained glass windows, transoms and sidelights, pedimented entry ways, decorative roofing, bracketed eaves, imaginative porches and porte cocheres.

In addition to its residences, the district has other buildings which are architecturally and historically important to the neighborhood. Constructed in 1925, the Trinity United Methodist Church at Galloway and Evergreen is an excellent local example of the late use of an eclectic Gothic style. Another architecturally impressive building in the district is Snowden School, designed in 1910 in a Beaux Arts style by the prominent Memphis architects Jones and Furbringer. The school organized the first P.T.A. in the city, which by 1925 was the third largest chapter in the United States. The school was constructed on land donated by Brinkley Snowden, partly as a result of lobbying efforts by the influential Evergreen Civic Club, whose early-twentieth-century clubhouse in the district is now a residence at Overton Park Avenue and Evergreen. The club also played a major role in convincing Southwestern (Rhodes College) to relocate from Clarksville, Tennessee, to a site adjacent to the district in 1924.

Equally influential in the history of Presbyterian-affiliated Southwestern at Memphis (Rhodes College) and the nominated district has been Evergreen Presbyterian Church. Although its current building is located just outside of the nominated boundaries, its original 1910 church still stands within the Evergreen Historic District at Autumn and Dickinson and is currently used by another denomination.

In its landscaping the Evergreen Historic District maintains an impressive green and shady character. Large lots, deep and uniform set-backs, and the retention of mature trees have marked the district's design from the start. Hence, it is very appropriate that the district adopted the name Evergreen, suggestive of its arbored, park-like quality.

The Evergreen Historic District has from its beginning attracted prominent families and professionals. Many citizens significant in the history of the city and region have made the neighborhood their home, including the city's early Park Commissioner and developer, Robert Galloway; creator of the American supermarket, Clarence Saunders; world explorer and writer, Richard Haliburton; businessman and owner of the Memphis Chicks baseball team, B.C. Tully; developer and co-founder of the Mid-South Fair, E.O. Bailey; banker and longtime president of the Memphis Board of Education, L.C. Humes; and Memphis Mayor William Ingram.

The Stonewall Place Historic District (NR 3/25/82) was listed for its significance in the areas of architecture and community planning. Comprised of 84 residences, the district contains a fine collection of early twentieth century architecture. The district was planned as a "residential park" that would be enhanced by landscaping, tree-lined boulevards, lamp posts, and entrance structures. A much larger residential area in this section of Memphis also developed during the early part of the twentieth century, especially after the Memphis Parkway System was begun. The Evergreen Historic District (NR 1/11/85), containing 1367 buildings, was also listed for its importance in the areas of architecture and community planning. The latter district encompassed Stonewall Place. Both districts contain buildings of similar style and are associated with the City Beautiful movement and the development of the Memphis Parkway System. The name of the Stonewall Place Historic District should be changed to reflect its inclusion in the Evergreen Historic District.
