Built 1853. Greek Revival design, fronted with double-tiered, balustraded piazzas and crowning pediment. Double doors on both floors have glass transoms and sidelights. Flat arches over windows.

Original interior was composed of four rooms with unusually large dining room and wide hall on first floor; second floor had four rooms, central hall, and large ballroom. Two stairways include the main staircase and a service stairway to the ballroom. Present interior has been adapted for community activities. Furnished with antiques. Large trees on grounds add distinctive beauty and dignity.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Century House is significant historically, culturally, and architecturally. As the residence of a large planter, it reflected gay life of antebellum South, later served as Confederate headquarters and is now a community center and library.

Situated on the Charlotte and South Carolina Railroad, house became center of social and business life of Ridgeway. During the Confederate War, Century House entertained and sheltered many refugees from Low Country South Carolina and from Georgia.

When General P.G.T. Beauregard evacuated Columbia upon the approach of Sherman's Army, Ridgeway was chosen as Confederate headquarters (Feb. 17-19, 1865). Century House served as headquarters for General Beauregard and his staff.

Thomas Hines Coleman, founder of Florida State School for the Deaf and Blind was born here in 1885.

A cherished landmark, the Century House is a good example of constructive preservation and adaptive use. While preserving the appearance and hospitable atmosphere of antebellum Fairfield, it also provides modern facilities for a variety of community meetings and activities.
