Description

During the Railroad Era (1870-1914) in White County a variety of vernacular houses were constructed. They were also built out of a variety of materials. Intact surviving examples from this period, however, are somewhat limited. The Joe Emmer House is a good example of a one-story, single-pen log building. It has a corrugated metal gable roof and the entire structure rests on stone piers. The building was constructed c. 1890, and has had several historic alterations. It is currently unoccupied and in fair condition.

Located on the north side of County Road 47 and one and three-quarter miles west of the small crossroads community of Holly Springs, this building is located in a very rural area. The log walls on the north and south elevations of the house consist of hand-hewn logs which are 17'10" long. They are connected to similar logs on the east and west elevations by half dovetail notching. The logs on these elevations, however, are only 17'6" long. All logs are four and a half inches wide and six and a half inches tall. A box construction addition is attached to the west elevation of the structure. This addition is covered with board and batten siding. Both gable ends of the building, however, are covered with weatherboard. A centrally placed board and batten door enters the main, or south, elevation of the building. This door, like the others in the building, is constructed with square nails. A single window is located east of this but all glazing has been removed.

Extending the entire length of the building, including the addition, is a shed roofed porch which is supported by wooden posts. The south elevation of the addition is also entered by a centrally placed board and batten door. An exterior end chimney was originally located on the east elevation of the log structure but has since been removed. A board and batten, shed roofed addition extends the length of the north elevation of the log building. There was a sliding window originally centrally placed in this addition but all glazing has been removed from it. The shed roof of this addition extends across the north elevation of the box addition forming a porch roof. A centrally placed sliding window relieves the west elevation of the box addition.

Significance

When this building was constructed (c. 1890) it was one of numerous single-pen, log buildings built in White County during the Railroad Era. Even though this house has had several alterations, it is one of only thirty-one single-pen log buildings left in the county which date to this period. The additions themselves are important because they are indicative of construction techniques used during this period in largely rural areas. For these reasons this building is being nominated under Criterion C with local significance.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.
