DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Mayor Girod House is a three story building with walls of stuccoed brick. The hipped roof has four dormers with segmental pendiments along the Chartres Street side and one dormer with a triangular pediment on the St. Louis Street side. An octagonal cupola which affords a view of the river surmounts the roof. The house could be called Louis XVI in its formal severity of stripped classicism. No applied orders of pilasters or columns relieve the plain walls. Shallow relief of rectilinear molding which runs along the first and second floor levels forms window molding as it continues somewhat like a Greek key band, around the windows. Similar banding follows under the cornice line and at the edges of slightly rounded corners, almost creating the effect of the wall being divided into recessed panels. Shallow balconies decorate the second floor level of both the old and new structures, with low ironwork railings. The subtle elegance of the design lends an austere beauty to the imposing building.

The original stair rises from the courtyard through all three floors in a broad graceful sweep. Three elliptical windows at the second story level of the main house open onto the courtyard which is enclosed on the other sides by the earlier two story building and connecting links.

The interior, although broken up for apartments, retains most of its original wooden mantels and interior woodwork. The mantels are typical Louisiana style with boxed paneled fireplaces and tall narrow paneled overmantels that extend to the high ceiling cornices. The one in what was once the main living room is particularly elaborate. The mantel itself has double engaged columns with a garland frieze below the shelf. Tall attenuated pilasters form the overmantel with a starred lunette flanked by carved angels in carved relief above. The section of cornice above the mantel is dentiled to add greater ornament to the central focus of the room. Other mantels, although not as highly decorated, are still carefully detailed and varied in design.

The building is in very good condition when its constant use as a multi-family residence is considered. The main stair is also heavily worn and should receive attention.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

One of the best examples of the continuing French architectural influence in New Orleans, the Mayor Girod House, is a structural composite dating from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Mayor Nicolas Girod built the three-story section of the building in 1814 attaching it to a two-story section constructed by his brother in 1794. Little altered and unrestored, the Mayor Girod house is an important and excellent example of a large French colonial townhouse in the United States.

HISTORY

In 1814, Nicolas Girod, then serving his first term as mayor of New Orleans, inherited from his brother, Clause Francois, a corner lot at Chartres and St. Louis Streets. He built the large main house which is sometimes known as The Napoleon House because of local stories which tie Girod to a plan to rescue the former French leader and give him the house as his residence. Girod owned the house until his death in 1841. The Impastato family has owned the building for about seventy years. A bar and grill is now located in the first floor and the rest of the house has been converted into apartments, but great care is taken by the current owners to maintain the structure of the building.
