7. DESCRIPTION

The Williamson Historic District (Photos 1-22; Figs. 1-4) consists of a mixed-use concentration of 46 acres located on the north side of Williamson, the county seat of Mingo County, West Virginia. Mingo County is located in rural southwestern West Virginia; Pike County, Kentucky, borders Mingo County to the west, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River. The district contains a total of 346 resources, most of which are residential in character (Photos 1,3, 6-8, 10, 11, 13-17, 19, and 20). A small concentration of commercial properties are found on Fourth Avenue and Logan Street and several churches (Photos 9, 21) are scattered throughout the district. A 1927 former hospital (Resource No.14; Photo No. 21) converted to professional office use is on Mulberry Street and a non-contributing school (Resource No. 40) faces Sixth Avenue. On Fourth Avenue is an early twentieth-century former railroad depot (Resource No. 321; Photo No. 1) which has been converted for use as the Williamson City Hall. A cemetery (Resource No.103) is located at the north end of Maple Walk; it is a contributing site. The historic brick-paved streets (Resource No. 342) are treated collectively as a contributing site. Various residential dependencies--primarily garages--are found throughout the district. Larger dependencies are included in the resource count which appears in Section 5, while smaller garages and sheds are also treated as uncounted landscape features. Several areas of paved surface parking are located in the commercial portion of the district; these are treated as uncounted landscape features. Two resources within the district was listed previously in the National Register: the Elven C. Smith House (Resource No. 232) at 210 Little Oak Street (NR 2002) is a 1938 Neo-Classical Revival-style home built for a leading Williamson businessman. The Smith House and its attendant historic stone retaining wall system appear on the map submitted with the nomination but are not counted in the resource count. Of the 344 unlisted resources in the district, 286 (83%) contribute to the character of the district and 56 (17%) are non-contributing. Most non-contributing properties post-date the period of significance; some of these are residential dependencies. Only in a few cases have properties been insensitively altered to the extent that they no longer retain sufficient integrity to be considered contributing. The district as a whole retains integrity and is a physically-cohesive concentration of individual buildings of diverse historic and current function, located within a geographical area whose boundaries can be readily defined by the character of the properties found within.

The Williamson Historic District is primarily residential in character and contains numerous examples of the architectural styles popular during the 64-year period of significance, as well as a variety of vernacular<sup>1</sup> buildings erected without reference to any particular formal style but which nonetheless reflect the historic building traditions prevalent in this part of West Virginia. In addition to the houses in the district, the nominated area also includes a variety of domestic dependencies (primarily single-story automobile garages), several historic churches (Photo Nos. 9, 21), a former hospital and nurses' home (Resource Nos. 13, 14; Photo Nos. 22, 23), two Masonic lodge buildings (Resource Nos. 62 and 72; Photo Nos. 2, 5), a former train station (Resource No. 321; Photo 1), and a small number of commercial buildings located along Alderson Street (Photo No. 4) and Fourth Avenue, the latter of which forms the southwestern periphery of the district.

Most of the Williamson Historic District lies north of Fourth Avenue (U. S. Rt. 52). The topography of the district rises steeply north of Fourth Street to its northern periphery along Poplar Street. The former Williamson Hospital (Resource No. 14; Photo No. 22) is at the northeast corner of the district and is sited on one of the highest points in the city. Moving from south to north are the following streets: Fourth through Seventh Avenues, followed by Oak and Poplar Street. Moving from the west to east, the aforementioned streets are intersected by Pritchard, Dickinson, Harvey, and Logan Streets. Wallace Street extends northward on a diagonal beside the high school, linking Sixth Avenue and Oak Street. Pine Street runs southwest-to-northeast near the east end of the district and upon crossing Fifth Avenue becomes Alderson Street. Elm Street forms a part of the eastern edge of the district, extending northward from Fourth Avenue. One block of Joseph Avenue extends between Alderson and Elm Streets, and Mulberry Street forms a part of the northern periphery of the district near the former hospital. Among the district's most distinctive areas is found along Maple Walk (Photo Nos. 19, 20) at the top of the hill along the southeastern edge of the district. A series of substantial homes faces the city below and is accessed from the rear along Elm Street. In front of these homes is a walkway leading southward from Joseph Street.

The streets in the Williamson Historic District are paved, some retaining historic brick finishes likely laid by master mason Thoney Pietro, who is known to have worked in Williamson early in the twentieth century and whose work is discussed in more detail in Section 8. Concrete and stone curbs are found along the streets. Unnamed alleys run between Fourth and Fifth Avenues and Fifth and Sixth Avenues. Traffic signals are found along Fourth Avenue, which is a busy commercial thoroughfare. Street lighting employs "cobra head" light fixtures mounted on utility poles and powered by overhead wiring.

Throughout the district area a series of substantial stone and concrete retaining walls, likely dating from the district's earlier years. Ranging in height from c.4 feet to c.6 feet and c. 1 foot in depth, these structures hold back the front and side yards of properties erected along the district's steep hillsides. They are in varying condition, including some areas which exhibit evidence of slippage over time. Within the context of the district, the walls are treated as a single contributing structure (Resource No. 343).

Development throughout the district is dense, with the vast majority of the buildings occupying a single building lot. Most of the district's residential buildings are two stories in height and generally rest on foundations of sandstone. The 3½-story former Williamson Memorial Hospital on Mulberry Street (Resource No. 14; Photo No. 22) is the tallest building in the district, followed by the three-story Masonic Lodge (Resource No. 62; Photo No 2) on Logan Street. Roof forms include the gabled roof, both laterally-oriented and gable-end-oriented, as well as the hipped and pyramidal forms. The district's few Dutch Colonial Revival-style houses exhibit the characteristic gambrel roof which defines the style. The former nurses' home (Resource No.13) adjacent to the former hospital (Resource No.14; Photo No. 23) has a Mansard roof. Residential roofs are finished in asphalt shingle, slate, and metal. The district's few commercial and secular institutional buildings have flat roofs. The finishes of flat roofs are not easily observable but were likely originally clad in welded sheet metal, which was replaced over the years by rolled roofing and more recently, by rubber membranes. Chimneys of brick and concrete block have been retained on many properties, although in some instances chimneys have been removed in the course of retrofitting heating systems. Residential buildings generally retain front porches and verandas of varying sizes and detailing. Brick is the favored building material in the district, followed by wood. Flat-topped fenestration appears on the majority of the buildings in the district; churches exhibit arched windows, often glazed with religious art glass.

Landscaping within the district varies considerably. Most houses are set back from their respective roadways, with front yards and side and rear yards of varying dimension. Historic post card views (Fig. 4) indicate that trees were planted early on along the sidewalks in the district. Mature shade trees are retained in small numbers throughout the district. The majority of the homes in the district rely upon on-street parking; some properties have garages at the side or rear of their respective lot.

The Williamson Historic District developed after the heyday of Victorian architecture. Formal architectural styles represented within the district include the Queen Anne, Neo-Classical and Romanesque Revivals, American Foursquare, Late Gothic Revival, Colonial Revival (including Dutch Colonial Revival), Cape Cod, and Bungalow.

The Queen Anne style was on the wane by the time this neighborhood developed. Restrained examples of Queen Anne-style detailing, including multi-light windows, occur at the Lewis Apartments, 109 Joseph Street (Resource No. 88) and the house at 34 Fifth Avenue (Resource No. 156). The purest Queen Anne-style residence in the district is the Montezuma Z. White brick cottage with a round tower located at 306 Oak Street (Resource No. 234).

The rise of the Neo-Classical Revival style marked a resurgence of interest in the design tenets of Classical Greece and Rome. Although practiced in its purest form only sporadically in the Williamson Historic District, examples include the previously-listed Elven Smith House at 210 Little Oak Street (Resource No. 232), a brick house on Maple Walk with a full portico (Resource No. 105), the Masonic Lodge Building on Logan Street (Resource No. 61), and the Presbyterian Academy Building at 138 Oak Street (Resource No. 236).

The Colonial Revival style was born in the fervor of patriotism generated by the American Centennial of 1876 and remained in vogue throughout much of the balance of the period of significance of the Williamson Historic District. Some Colonial Revival-style buildings are reasonably faithful representations of eighteenth-century design, while others only include a hint of Colonial detailing, such as a symmetrical facade, a centered entry with fanlight and/or transom, and, in some cases, a Palladian window or dormers. Dutch Colonial Revival homes are in the district as well. Colonial Revival style design is represented in the U-shaped apartment building on Alderson Street (Resource No. 50) and in the properties at 708 College Hill, 519 Maple Walk, and 32 and 24 Oak Street (Resource Nos. 93, 130,250, and 253, respectively)

The Dutch Colonial Revival style, with its characteristic gambrel roof form, appears in the houses at 108 Alderson Street, 542 Maple Walk, 38 West Fifth Avenue, and 702 Dickinson Street (Resource Nos. 33, 113, 158, and 312, respectively).

A particularly prolific style within the historic district is the ubiquitous American Foursquare, which appears more often than any other design mode. Often interpreted as more of a house type than an architectural style, Foursquares appear on nearly every street in America dating from the decades between 1910 and 1930. Representing purely twentieth-century design, such houses are typically square in form, generally with a hipped or pyramidal roof penetrated by dormers. They appear equally in wood and masonry, exhibit facades which are two or three bays in width, and have a porch, typically with a hipped roof. This style is represented in the Williamson Historic District by the properties at 853, 849, 847, 837, 833, 716, 710, and 708 Alderson Street (Resource No. 18, 20, 21, 26, 28, 44, 47, and 48, respectively) and 511 Logan Street, 426 Pike Street, 420 Joseph Street, and 570, 548-550, and 333 Maple Walk (Resource No. 55, 68, 84, 104, 108, and 118, respectively).

The Gothic and Romanesque Revival styles in the district occur in religious design and borrow forms, massing, and fenestration patterns from the Middle Ages. The former style employed lancet-arched fenestration while the latter used the semi-circular-arched window form and door openings. Gothic influence appears in the First Baptist Church (Resource No. 164) and the Church of Christ (Resource No. 188). The Presbyterian Church (Resource No. 200; Photo No. 9) features a Romanesque Revival-style arcaded loggia on its facade.

Twentieth-century domestic design in the district is also represented by Bungalows, born of the American interpretation of the Arts-and-Crafts movement early in the twentieth century (Photo Nos. 14, 17). Bungalows are typically 1½ stories in height and incorporate a laterally-oriented gable roof which projects beyond the plane of the house, shields a recessed front porch, and is penetrated by one or more dormers. Bungalows in the district include the houses at 510 Logan Street, 128 and 16 Fifth Avenue, 119, 22, and 32 Sixth Avenue, and 701 Academy Street (Resource Nos. 71, 146, 208, 220, 225, and 240, respectively).

The Cape Cod style, popular from the 1930s through the end of the period of significance, is typified by houses of 1½ stories in height with a symmetrical facade and dormers. This style appears once in the district, in a house on Pritchard Street (Resource No. 273).

The mid-twentieth-century Ranch-style house appeared in the Williamson Historic District at the end of the period of significance. One story in height and elongated in form, Ranch-style houses dating from within the period of significance of the district include 843 and 833 Mulberry Street, 430 Pike Street, and 563 and 555 Maple (Resource Nos. 2, 6, 70, 98, and 102, respectively).

The following properties lie within the Williamson Historic District. The numbering is keyed to the map prepared in conjunction with the nomination documents.

8. Significance

The Williamson Historic District meets National Register Criterion C for architecture, as a strong, locally-significant, and relatively dense concentration of primarily residential and institutional buildings built between c.1892 and the mid-1950s and including examples of many of the styles of design popular during the period of significance. The district reflects the growth and maturity of this West Virginia community in the wake of significant coal, timber, and associated railroad development beginning in the last decade of the nineteenth century and spanning the next half-century. The district retains integrity in all seven qualities defined in the National Register guidelines, exhibiting those physical qualities, associative values, design features, and specific aspects of construction which date from within its period of significance. The period of significance begins in 1892, the date which marks the establishment of the town of Williamson and the construction of the district's earliest buildings, and ends in 1956, corresponding to the National Register 50-year guideline and the date by which the last of the district's historic properties was constructed.

A dearth of written history exists for Williamson and Mingo County. However, this area of southwestern West Virginia is extremely rugged and mountainous and it is certain that little settlement by non-indigenous pioneers occurred prior to the mid-nineteenth century. The area that would become Williamson was originally part of Montgomery County, Virginia. In 1824 it became part of Logan County, named for the Native American chief of the Mingo tribe, one of several tribes to use the area as hunting and fishing grounds prior to about 1800.

Williamson lies in the northwestern quadrant of the land grant conveyed to John Green by the Commonwealth of Virginia in 1795. In 1835, Green's heirs conveyed a 4,000-acre tract to Anthony Lawson; it is on this tract that Williamson stands. In 1858, the Lawson parcel was transferred to Benjamin Williamson. The first eight decades of the nineteenth century saw only sporadic development in Mingo County. The land whereon Williamson grew was little more than open fields as late as the early 1890s.

In 1888 a survey crew from the Norfolk and Western Railway appeared in the area, which still remained as undeveloped farm lands in the hands of the Williamson family. Wallace J. Williamson, a member of the original family who controlled significant real estate and timber interests in the region, formed a land company known as the Williamson Mining and Manufacturing Company. Recognizing that the site favored the development of a settlement, and spurred on by the future offered by the railroad, a speculative town was laid out that would intersect with the proposed N & W. In 1892 the community was established and was named for Wallace Williamson and his pioneer family; Wallace Street, within the Williamson Historic District, bears his name. Williamson sold off his new town lots at public auction, with prices ranging from as little as twenty-five dollars to as high as two-hundred and fifty dollars.

The N & W tracks reached the settlement in 1892 and continued westward into the coal fields of Pike County, Kentucky. J. B. Williamson was elected the first mayor of the fledgling community. In 1895, 423.5 acres of the western portion of Logan County were split off and became Mingo County, with both Williamson and Rockhouse vying for the position of county seat. An election was held and, even though Williamson contained fewer than twenty buildings and a population of about one hundred, it was chosen as the county seat of the new Mingo County.

As the region's coal reserves were mapped and the main line of the N & W was extended to Williamson, the community's initial burst of growth began. Williamson lies in the heart of what has been known as the "Billion-Dollar Coal Field," and the fortunes of the community would forever be tied to the fortunes of the railroad and mining industry. A wood depot (not extant) was erected in the middle of town and the first passenger train stopped here in 1892; by 1894 four trains stopped daily in the new town.

In 1901, coal mines began to be opened along the N & W route. The railroad needed a regional hub from which to control its growing operations, and Williamson was chosen. A 1969 commemorative publication related to the community's history noted, "the company began the construction of their yards here and has steadily increased them adding something every year until now Williamson has the largest yards between Portsmouth and Roanoke, even exceeding Bluefield."<sup>2</sup>

The first permanent school building was erected in 1900; prior to that time, classes had been held only haphazardly, at whatever site could be secured. In 1902 a new Court House was erected in the heart of the downtown section which by that time had developed along First, Second, and Third Avenues. The downtown lies southwest of and outside the nominated area. In 1905 the community shed its original identity as an unincorporated town and became chartered as a city. By 1907 the 1900 schoolhouse had become obsolete and it was replaced by a new 12-room building which also contained two assembly halls. Neither of these earliest schools is extant. In 1904 a private school was established in a building erected on Oak Street. Known as the Presbyterian Academy (Resource No. 234), the institution was short-lived, lasting only from 1904 until 1910; the building has been converted into a residence. The present-day high school (Resource No.40) is a non-contributing element in the Williamson Historic District.

During the early decades of the twentieth century, transportation depended on the railroad and the most rudimentary of road systems. 1908 saw the construction of a privately-financed bridge spanning the Tug Fork, linking Williamson to Pike County, Kentucky and the village of South Williamson. Rail service was provided by the N & W; passengers boarded trains at the depot on Fourth Avenue (Resource No. 321) which has since been converted for use as Williamson City Hall.

The ample stands of forest in the region assured that the earliest architecture in Williamson would be of wood construction. These buildings were modest in their scale and detail and many fell victim to a series of fires which ravaged the community; the most serious of these occurred in 1906 and destroyed more than twenty buildings. As Williamson re-built, masonry became the favored building material.

As the community grew, leaders recognized the need for paved streets to match the Williamson's growing prominence in the southwest West Virginia coal fields. Portions of Second through Fourth Streets were paved with brick in 1904, along with sections of Harvey, Pike, and Logan Streets. Much of the paving of Williamson streets was the work of Thoney Pietro, an Italian immigrant paving contractor who settled in Morgantown, West Virginia in the 1890s (Fig. 5 and 6). His brick-paving work across West Virginia and beyond became the stuff of legend.<sup>3</sup>

The location of the N & W shops and roundhouse in Williamson contributed significantly to the economy of the community and the region as a whole. The town's most active building era is referred to as the "building boom of '27." In that year, 1927, nearly one billion dollars in construction occurred, including public buildings, the community hospital, apartment buildings, and private homes.

The railroad continued to spur the economy of the community well into the ensuing decades. In 1930, eighteen trains passed through Williamson daily. Six of these offered service eastward to Norfolk and westward to Cincinnati. Locals served coal camps and small towns with picturesque names such as Pond Creek, Thacker, Kermit, Matewan, and Chatteroy.

The institutional growth and maturity of Williamson are represented in the Williamson Historic District by several religious and secular institutional properties. Among the religious properties in the district are the First Baptist, the St. James AME, the First Presbyterian, Sacred Heart Roman Catholic, the Church of Christ, and the Synagogue of the Congregation B'Nai Israel. The city's fraternal life is represented by two lodge halls, one on Alderson Street (Resource No. 78) and the 3-story Masonic Lodge of 1930 (Resource No. 61). In 1927, during the aforementioned "building boom," Drs. George Conley and Russell Salton built the Williamson Memorial Hospital (resource No. 14) atop "College Hill" at the northeast corner of the Williamson Historic District. A French-Second Empire-influenced nurses' home (Resource No. 13) is immediately adjacent. The local high school (Resource No. 40) is a non-contributing feature in the district due to its age, but educational history in Williamson is represented in the district by the Presbyterian Academy (Resource No. 234) at 138 Oak Street.

Throughout the balance of the period of significance, Williamson remained inextricably tied to coal and to the railroad, as it had been from its earliest days. When the mines were active, Williamson grew and prospered and vice versa. Population statistics indicate a municipal population only 688 in 1900. By the 1920s, Williamson had grown into one of the major economic and industrial centers in the southern West Virginia coal fields, reflected in the 1920 population of 6,819, which swelled to 9,410 in 1930. However, stagnation of the regional economy over the decades resulted in a significant decline in Williamson's population, which was recorded at 3,414 in 2000.

The Williamson Historic District's Criterion C significance for architecture is established by the presence in the district of a strong and cohesive concentration of architecture, primarily residential, which mirrors sixty-five years of development in Williamson and reflects many of the popular styles of design in vogue throughout the period of significance of the district. Included among these styles are the Queen Anne, and Romanesque, Gothic and Late Gothic, Neo-Classical, and Colonial Revival, Bungalow, American Foursquare, Cape Cod, and Ranch styles, along with numerous vernacular derivations of many of the styles and other properties reflecting no particular architectural style but nonetheless reflecting local building traditions within the community. Specific examples of representative styles appear in Section 7.

In addition to its reflection of the community's domestic architectural legacy, the institutional growth and maturity of the community is seen in several substantial religious buildings, two fraternal buildings, a former hospital and its associated nursing building, and an early-twentieth-century private academy building. Williamson's close link to the N & W Railroad is manifest in the former depot, which now serves as City Hall.

Examining the Williamson Historic District in the context of other similar resources, several comparisons can be made. The Fleming-Watson Historic District (NR 2001) in Fairmont, dates from generally the same period as does the Williamson Historic District, and, historically, also owes its existence to the development of the West Virginia coal fields. The architecture of the 85-acre Fleming-Watson district is similarly scaled to that of the Williamson Historic District but is somewhat larger in area, containing more than 400 buildings. Further, the Fleming-Watson Historic District is anchored by the mammoth "High Gate;" Williamson can claim no such monumental domestic architecture. Other residential districts in the region, including Charleston's East End Historic District (NR 1978) and Edgewood Historic District (NR 1989), are of a far more urban residential character than is the Williamson district, which retains its rural small-town county seat character and ambiance. The Downtown Weston Residential Historic District, located considerably north of Williamson, immediately abuts a downtown commercial historic district which also includes the county court house. Morgantown's South Park Historic District is a large, upper middle class residential district and the Greenmont Historic District, also in Morgantown is more of an ethnically and racially diverse district that is the Williamson district.

Unlike this district, many of the other listed districts in the region are primarily commercial in character, accounting for an entirely different appearance, scale, density, and architectural character. The Weston Downtown Historic District (NR 1978), is one such district, as are the Clarksburg Historic District (NR 1982) and the Salem Historic District (NR 1980), both north of Charleston and well north of Williamson. The Salem district is a generally linear 14.8-acre district and reflects construction in the downtown following a 1901 fire. The Downtown Morgantown Historic District (NR 1996) is a commercial district as well.

In nearby Kentucky, the several districts in Pikeville, the county seat of Pike County which lies immediately west of Williamson, are of a somewhat more substantial scale than is the Williamson district. The Stone Historic District, also in Pike County, consists of a coal camp with three substantial coal company buildings and a series of one- and two-story company houses formerly owned by auto magnate Henry Ford.

Summarizing, the Williamson Historic District is distinctive as a cohesive and strong concentration of locally-significant, primarily domestic architecture dating from the last years of the nineteenth century through the first half-century of the twentieth and meets the National Register Criteria for Evaluation under Criterion C for its architectural significance.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

These boundaries encompass the historic neighborhood, primarily residential in character, which lies north of the N & W Railroad and was among the first residential areas to be developed in Williamson after the community was founded in the early 1890s. The boundaries are drawn to exclude as many non-contributing buildings as possible, including a multi-story apartment building on Fourth Avenue.
