The Capital Hotel opened January 22, 1877, as Little Rock's finest hotel. Today after almost 100 years of continual use the Capital remains the most significant structure of its kind in the State of Arkansas. Located at Markham and Louisiana Streets in downtown Little Rock, the Capital is constructed of brick with a facade of cast iron. The basic dimensions of this four-story, white painted structure measure one hundred thirty-two (132') feet by one hundred thirty (130') feet.

This excellent example of Victorian grandeur boasts seventeen bays across its facade. Projecting from the center of the front elevation is a one-story portico five bays in length and supported by six columns with Corninthian capitals. The second story porch deck is enclosed by a simple wrought iron railing, and surmounted by a canopy edged with decorative iron scroll work.

Across the entire length of the first story the front elevation has engaged Corinthian columns between each bay. With the exception of the deck projection on the second floor, the second and third story facades are identical with two sash, semi-elliptical headed windows separated by squared columns. The fourth story, added about 1889, has a mullion window with transom between each of the Corinthian capitaled pilasters.

Each corner of the flat roof ends in a two bay wide gable with moulded cornice. Alternately spaced brackets and panels embellish the frieze, along with five circular, decorative air vents, one under each gable and the others centered above the three center bays.

The symmetry of the second and third stories of the north facade is repeated on the west elevation. The first ten windows each have an Italianate arch, while the last five are segmentally arched with keystones. The fourth storyyhas segmental pediments over the first ten windows, and segmental arches with keystones are over the last five bays. All the windows have decorated lugsills. Both ends and the center of the roof have gables identical to those on the facade. Three decorative air vents and paired brackets embellish the plain frieze.

7. Description (Continued - Page 2)

The south and east elevations of the Capital have faced alleyways throughout the building's history. Because these elevations were never intended for public view, they are very plain with brick veneer and simple window construction.

On entering the main lobby of the Capital Hotel, one first notices the inlaid tile flooring, the two parallel rows of columns with uniquely decorated capitals, and the gray marble staircase located opposite the entrance. Both squared marble and round painted columns support the exposed beams which terminate in a recessed ceiling. Thick panels of highly polished gray marble line the interior walls of the lobby. On the west side is the hotel desk with the original wrought iron grill work and etched glass panels.

Divided flights of the stairway lead to a second floor balcony which surrounds the light well over the rear part of the lobby. The square skylight at the top of the light well contains stained glass panes leaded together in a wooden frame.

Surrounding the second floor light well are round arches supported by columns with Ionic capitals. A wrought iron with polished brass railing lies between each of the columns. Parallel rows of arcading lead to a parlor which opens onto the veranda.

Most of the remaining area of the Capital is taken up by hotel rooms. Wide and spacious hallways are lined by doorways with symmetrically moulded trim and corner blocks. Each room has a fifteen foot or higher ceiling. The baseboards and window and door trim are made of polished wood.

Though several alterations have been made in the interior and on parts of the exterior, the important changes were made within a few years of the original construction and are in keeping with the original style. Beneath the peeling paint the Capital Hotel retains the grandiose Victorian elegance of an earlier era.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

For one hundred years the Capital Hotel building has stood in downtown Little Rock as a relic of the Gilded Age of American history. From its opening in 1877 until just after the turn of the century, the Capital was the leading hotel in Little Rock and the center of public life in the state.

The land on which the Capital now stands belonged for many years to Judge George C. Watkins, a prominent Little Rock attorney and Chief Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court. In June, 1872, the land was sold to Mr. William P. Denckla. Mr. Denckla, one of the builders of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad owned several buildings on the "Denckla block," and the building he erected on the northwest corner became the most important.

Using a cast iron front purchased in New York and shipped in pieces on a water route to Little Rock, Mr. Denckla built a three-story brick structure. When a fourth story was later added to the building, a cast iron facade was included to harmonize with the cast iron front on the lower floors. The Denckla building was originally intended for stores and offices, and it filled this capacity for the next four years.

During the 1870's Little Rock was growing and expanding rapidly as the city recovered from the Civil War. In 1876 the Weekly Arkansas Gazette described the need for a public guest residence as an ". . . urgent necessity that our city, just now struggling into life and stability, should have a public house for the accommodation of the traveling community. The fitness of the building and site . . . demand the change" of the Denckla building into a hotel.

8. Significance (Continued - Page 2)

On December 21, 1876, Colonel A. G. DeShon and Major John D. Adams leased the Denckla building, and within a month they converted the office building into a hotel. The Denckla building was described as one of the finest edifices in the s South and a fair rival to model structures in Northern cities. Colonel DeShon altered the interior to match the grand facade.

In deciding on a name for the planned hotel, Major Adams asked a Little Rock lady to suggest a fitting title. Mrs. Morehead Wright complied with the request, and her reply was as follows:

Major John D. Adams: Appreciating the compliment of being asked to name your hotel, I can think of no name more appropriate than "The Capital Hotel", as it is a capital enterprise located in a capital building, which will do honor to the capital of the state, and I trust prove a capital success to yourself and Maj. DeShon.

When the Capital Hotel opened on January 22, 1877, it was beautifully furnished and had daintily figured carpets in every room. Gas provided the lighting system throughout. A magnetized annuciator enabled each guest to request individual room service by merely pushing a button. In keeping with the current fashion among first-class hotels, the Capital provided its guests with a restaurant, bar, barber shop and billiard hall.

For the next thirty years the Capital was the leading hotel in Little Rock. It became the unofficial political head-quarters of the entire state, and within its walls the success or failure of many an office-seeker was determined. One of the most famous political battles waged within the walls of the Capital was that between J. D. Walker of Fayetteville and R. W. Johnson of Little Rock, both candidates for the United States Senate in 1879. Walker had headquarters in one end of the hotel and Johnson in the other. From their respective rooms one of the most memorable political campaigns in the history of the State was directed.

Before being converted into a hotel the Denckla building was involved in another and bigger political battle. In 1874 the Brooks-Baxter War was being waged, and President Ulysses S. Grant sent Federal troops to intervene. The Denckla building served as headquarters for Federal officers. It also served as the dividing line between the Brooks and Baxter forces, with the middle ground in front of the present hotel being occupied by Federal troops attempting to prevent a clash.

In its heyday the Capital Hotel served as the temporary home for Little Rock's most distinguished visitors. During his 1880 visit to the city, President Grant stayed at the Capital, and the facade received a new coat of paint in honor of this special guest.

Business was so prosperous for the Capital that a fourth story was added to the original three story structure. In an advertisement published in 1890, it was announced that the hotel had been "enlarged, improved, refitted and refurnished." A few years later another addition was made to the rear of the building. In the early twentieth century the lobby was elegantly redecorated; however, by this time the popularity of the Capital was beginning to wane. A rival hotel was opened across the street, and was destined to replace the Capital as the political and social center of Arkansas.

The Capital Hotel has never closed its doors for any great length of time, but has continually served the public since 1877. Other establishments have dominated the Little Rock hotel business in the twentieth century, but the Capital, unlike many, has never been forced to close. Ironically, the neighboring hotel which took and retained for sixty years the Capital's prominent position, will soon be demolished. Yet the historic Capital Hotel will continue to stand as the visible reminder of a great era. Because of its stately architecture, its cast iron front and its historic role as the State's most important hotel, the Capital Hotel is one of the most significant buildings in Arkansas

Dear Mr. Markley:

This is to acknowledge that the Council is in receipt of the final plans and specifications for the rehabilitation of the Capitol Hotel, Little Rock, Arkansas, a property listed on the National Register of Historic Places. After reviewing the plans and specifications, the Executive Director finds no reason to object to the undertaking as proposed.

We understand that your office and the Arkansas State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) have also been provided an opportunity to review the construction documents. We further understand that a copy of the SHPO's letter which states her concurrence with the suitability of the plans will be provided for the Council's files. Therefore, it is our opinion that stipulation one of the Memorandum of Agreement entered into by the Economic Development Administration and the Council and ratified by the Chairman on August 15, 1979, has been satisfactorily fulfilled.

We are appreciative of your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely,

Louis S. Wall
