SUMMARY

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is located at 115 South 2nd Street in Hampton, Calhoun County, Arkansas. The two-story building, which is the only two-story building in Hampton's central business district, is located on the east side of the courthouse square and faces the courthouse to the west. The building is built out of brick and rests on a continuous brick foundation. A sloped roof behind a stepped parapet crowns the building. A wood-framed addition sheathed in corrugated metal siding is located on the rear of the building.

ELABORATION

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is located at 115 South 2nd Street in Hampton, the county seat of Calhoun County. The Masonic Lodge Building is the only two-story commercial building in Hampton and is located on the east side of the courthouse square. The two-story portion of the building is faced in red brick with yellow brick trim while the one-story rear addition is covered in corrugated sheet metal siding. The building rests on a continuous brick foundation and is topped by a rear-sloping roof behind a stepped parapet. The building would have had commercial uses on the first floor with offices and meeting space on the upper floor, but it is currently vacant.

Front/West Façade

The west façade of the building faces South 2nd Street and the Calhoun County Courthouse. The first floor of the building is where the commercial space would have been located. Beginning on the north side of the façade, there is a white wood door with a large single pane of glass in it. The door provides access to the building's second floor. To the right of the door is a five-pane, metal-framed window. To the right of the window is the main entrance, which consists of a metal-framed glass door with metal-framed transom and sidelights. To the right of the entrance is a large plate-glass window.

The building is spanned by a full-width flat awning. The awning is supported by six evenly-spaced wood posts. The posts at either end are square while the middle four are decorative with lathe turnings. The awning is also attached to the front façade on the second floor by five metal rods. (It appears that a sixth rod may have been present in the past, but it is missing.) Above the awning are two boarded-up areas, likely where transom or prism glass windows were located historically. Immediately above the boarded up areas, a row of soldier bricks in alternating yellow and buff colors spans the façade.

The second floor of the front façade is fenestrated by six-over-six, wood-frame, double-hung windows. Beginning on the north side of the façade there is a single window followed by two pairs of windows and ending with another single window. All of the windows are shaded by silver, corrugated-metal awnings. In addition, the windows have window sills of yellow and buff brick and a lintels of a soldier course of buff brick.

United States Department of the Interior
National Park Service

National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Above the second floor windows, the building is ornamented with three lines of two courses of buff brick on each side. The bricks are oriented diagonally, creating a serrated effect, and the lower lines of brick are the shortest and the lines get longer the further up the façade they are. The top of the façade is crowned with three courses of buff brick, although the top course is covered by a metal cap over the parapet.

Side/South Façade

Much of the first floor of the south façade is covered by the building to the south. However, towards the east side of the original building is a wood-framed window opening with the frame of a double-hung window. The second floor of the original building is fenestrated by at least three double-hung, two-over-two windows. Above the windows, towards the west end of the building are three rectangular vents providing ventilation to the attic space.

The south façade of the rear addition, which is wood frame and covered in corrugated metal siding, is fenestrated by two stationary wood-frame, six-pane windows towards the west end of the addition. A wood-frame door covered in corrugated metal siding is located near the east end of the addition's wall.

Rear/East Façade

The first floor of the east façade is the one-story addition to the building. It has two sets of outward opening garage doors that provide access to the interior. The second floor of the east façade, which is comprised of the rear of the original building, is fenestrated by two double-hung, two-over-two windows located near the ends of the facade.

Side/North Façade

Much of the first floor of the north façade is covered by the building to the north. The second floor of the original building is fenestrated by at least four double-hung, two-over-two windows. Above the windows, towards the east end of the building are three rectangular vents providing ventilation to the attic space.

The north façade of the rear addition is fenestrated by one stationary, wood-frame, six-pane window near the center of the addition.

Integrity

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building retains good integrity from the time of its construction c.1920. The building's storefront has had a few alterations, mainly the installation of a new entrance, but otherwise it reflects the time of the building's construction. The rest of the front façade remains unaltered. Although the building has had an addition, it is on the rear of the building and does not overwhelm the original building. The setting around the building still reflects the small-town commercial setting of Hampton that would have been present when the building was constructed.

SUMMARY

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C with local significance as the best example of an early twentieth-century commercial-style building in Hampton. The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is the only two-story commercial building in Hampton and, with its decorative brickwork, one of the most elaborate commercial buildings in the community. The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is also being nominated to the National Register under Criterion A for its associations with the commercial development of Hampton. As Hampton grew in the early twentieth century, new buildings, including the Hampton Masonic Lodge Building, were built for the new commercial activity. The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is the most prominent building on the Calhoun County Courthouse Square.

ELABORATION

In relation to most other areas of Arkansas, settlement in what became Calhoun County occurred much later with the first settlers arriving in the area in the early 1840s. Many of the early settlers came to the area from Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee. Immigration to the area continued up to the Civil War, and then was suspended and stood at a standstill for many years. It was not until the 1880s that immigration to the area began to really increase again.¹

Although settlement began in Calhoun County in the early 1840s, by 1850 enough people were living in the area to form Calhoun County on December 6, 1850. The county, at its formation, encompassed 510 square miles of area that had been taken from Dallas and Ouachita counties plus a small island in Moro Creek that had been taken from Bradley County. The first county officials were elected in February 1851.²

The first industry in Calhoun County was the timber industry, which took advantage of Calhoun County's forests of short leaf yellow pine, cypress, oak, red gum and hickory. According to the Biographical and Historical Memoirs of Southern Arkansas, "When the railroad penetrated the northern part of this county, several mills were at once started, these mills have a combined capacity of about 36,000,000 feet annually; they give employment to over 300 hands, and as a consequence distribute much money among the people. In nearly seven years' operations, these mills have made but the slightest impression on the timber area; there is room for many more, and profitable remuneration for all."³

Shortly after the creation of Calhoun County, a site was chosen for the county seat in 1851, and it was named Hampton in honor of Colonel John R. Hampton, a state senator. After the site of Hampton was chosen, settlement in the area began. Mr. O. H. P. Black was the first person to settle in the town limits and he established a store and was appointed Hampton's first postmaster in 1851.⁴

On January 27, 1853, Hampton was incorporated after the presentation of a petition of A. I. Manor and other members of the community. The petition read:

Came A. I. Manor and others, and filed their petitions, praying an order to incorporate the town of Hampton, under the name and style of the Alderman and Town Council, of the town of Hampton, to be bounded as follows: Commencing at a point three hundred yards east of the center of the public square of said town; thence running north three hundred yards; thence west six hundred yards; thence south six hundred yards; thence east six hundred yards; thence north three hundred yards, to the place of beginning. Thereupon the court examined said petition, and granted the prayer, and ordered the following appointments to wit: That Dr. R. B. Archer be, and is hereby appointed alderman; and that N. M. Hunt, Capt. G. W. McCown, O. H. P. Black, A. I. Manor and Dr. I. M. Farrier, be and are hereby appointed members of the council.⁵

After the town was incorporated, the community remained an important trading place in the surrounding area. Several of the members of the early city government, including O. H. P. Black, Alex Manor, and Dr. J. M. Farrior, were also merchants in the community's early years. Many of them bought their stock in New Orleans and then had it shipped up the Ouachita River to Little Bay. Although trade was an important activity in Hampton's early history, business was nearly stopped during the Civil War and by the time the war ended there were no merchants left in the city.⁶

Although Hampton lost its merchants during the Civil War, it was not long until businesses reopened. I. B. & G. M. Strong opened a large store and it was the first business to open after the war. They were soon followed by Frost & Porter, who opened the largest store that Hampton had seen until that time, and several others so that Hampton's importance as a trade center was soon reestablished. Hampton was also reincorporated in 1871 with Dr. T. A. Black serving as mayor.⁷

The businesses in Hampton were not just affected by the Civil War – as in most towns, fires were a major problem beginning in the 1860s. In 1864, while a company of soldiers was burning cotton, the fire accidentally spread to the storehouse of O. H. P. Black. In addition, three other stores and the residence of Mrs. Sarah Estes were destroyed. A second fire, which occurred in 1882, destroyed the stores of S. C. Neel & Company, H. A. Porter, and G. B. Adams. The downtown was again struck by fire in November 1888 when the stores of Frost & Cook, L. G. Tomlinson, Colonel J. R. Thornton and Leonard Porter were destroyed. The 1888 fire also destroyed the printing office of the Calhoun County Courier, which was located in Colonel Thornton's store.⁸

Although Hampton lost some of its commercial importance after the St. Louis, Arkansas & Texas Railroad completed its line through northern Calhoun County in 1883, by the early twentieth century things were changing in Hampton. The largest change to downtown Hampton in the first part of the twentieth century was the construction of the new courthouse. Designed by Little Rock architect Frank W. Gibb and built in 1909 by contractor E. L. Koonce, the brick and stone building with its clock tower was a landmark in the small community (National Register-listed on 12/12/1976).⁹

However, it was not just the new Calhoun County Courthouse that was built in the early 1900s. As commerce developed in the first part of the twentieth century, new commercial buildings were built, especially on the north and east sides of the Courthouse Square and along Main Street between the Courthouse Square and U.S. 167 (formerly Arkansas Highway 115). The most elaborate and prominent of the new commercial buildings was the two-story Hampton Masonic Lodge Building.

The land that the Hampton Masonic Lodge Building sits on was originally titled to Nathaniel Hunt, one of the founders of Hampton, on November 1, 1852. By the early twentieth century, the land was owned by Mr. A. P. McCann and the lot contained a single-story building. McCann died in 1918, and by June 22, 1923, the lot contained the current two-story building, indicating that it was built between 1918 and 1923.¹⁰

After the building was built, the downstairs commercial space housed a variety of mercantile businesses and doctors' offices while the upstairs housed the Hampton Masonic Lodge and the Farmers Home Administration. In 1954, the building was acquired by Maude and Garland Harrell who opened the Western Auto Store in the building. Mary Strickland relates the excitement of the toy department, which was housed upstairs:

Upstairs was the dream-inducing toy department. Those wonderful Western Flyer bikes and red wagons brought up many dreams of flying faster than any of your friends. One well-known citizen, Carroll Newton, says he stood for years looking up the stairs, never daring to go up those steps because his mother told him that Santa's workshop was up there. He also recalls the day in his teens when he gathered enough courage to slowly make the journey to that sacred floor. Ms. Maude has talked about the children who came to shop and dream over those wonderful toys. She listened to their dreams and sometimes related these dreams to the parents who then told Santa.¹¹

In 1994, the building was sold by Garland and Maude Harrell to Charles Newton and his wife and it has since been acquired by Calhoun County. The county plans to renovate the building for use as an expanded library.¹²

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building remains one of the most prominent buildings on the Calhoun County Courthouse Square. The two-story design and the decorative brickwork also make it the most elaborate building in the community's commercial area. Furthermore, the fact that the building housed the Hampton Masonic Lodge and the Farmers Home Administration as well as several mercantile establishments over the years meant that it would have been an important building to the community. The county's plans to renovate the building into the library will mean that it will continue to play an important role in the community in the future.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C with local significance as the best example of an early twentieth-century commercial-style building in Hampton. The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is the only two-story commercial building in Hampton and, with its decorative brickwork, one of the most elaborate commercial buildings in the community. The Hampton Masonic Lodge Building is also being nominated to the National Register under Criterion A for its associations with the commercial development of Hampton. As Hampton grew in the early twentieth century, new buildings, including the Hampton Masonic Lodge Building, were built for the new commercial activity.
