DESCRIPTION SUMMARY:

Waters' River is a large plantation house constructed c. 1800-1820 on the Big Annessex River near Manokin in Somerset County, Maryland. The house is built of brick laid in Flemish bond, and stands two stories high above a raised basement. The steeply pitched gable roof is clad in wood shingles. The principal (south) facade is oriented to the river, and is three bays wide: 9/9 sash flank the central entrance on the first story, with 6/6 sash above. A two-story frame kitchen wing (a 1944 remodeling of a pre-1910 structure) extends from the east gable end. A small, one-story, 20th century porch is attached to the west gable. Significant original exterior features include splayed wooden lintels simulating jack arches over all window openings, recessed plaster panels below the second-story windows, a boxed cornice with dentilled bed molding, and corbeled interior chimneys which rise from each end. The interior is organized in a four room plan: A flush, six-panel door opens into a rectangular stair hall; a library and parlor lie to the left, and the dining room is directly behind the hall. A great deal of Federal period detail remains intact, including the stair and balustrade; mantels; paneled doors and reveals; and baseboard, chair rail, and architrave moldings. Also located on the property are three small outbuildings and a frame water tower, all of which are more recent than the main house and do not contribute to its significance. In addition, the property includes the site of an earlier Waters dwelling and the remains of a corduroy (log) road leading to the site of an oyster house at the river edge; the significance of these elements is uncertain.

Continuation sheet Waters' River Item number 7 Page 1
Somerset County, Maryland

GENERAL DESCRIPTION:

The tract of land and house known as "Waters' River" is located on the Big Annessex River and south of Maryland 361. The house stands at the south end of Hood Road which intersects Maryland 361 between Manokin and Upper Fairmount. Sudler's Creek, also known as Holland Creek, borders the property on the east.

The circa 1800-1820 two-story three bay four-room plan house rests on a raised cellar and is covered by a steeply pitched wood shingle roof. Four Flemish bond walls rise above a stepped water table and are pierced by 9/9 sash on the first floor and 6/6 sash on the second floor. Four over two window sash pierce the gable end walls to light the attic. Each window is distinguished by a flared wooden jack arch. However, the cellar window openings are spanned by brick jack arches. Between the first and second floor windows on front and back are decorative recessed plaster panels. At the base of the roof, a wooden boxed cornice with dentiled bed molding stretches across the front as well as the rear facades. Corbelled chimneys rise on each gable end. Attached to the east gable end is a two-story frame kitchen wing, which is a 1944 remodeling of an earlier frame addition. Extending from the west side is a 20th century single story porch. Aside from these major features, the south or water facade has a single bay gabled porch which covers the center entrance. A flush six-panel door opens into a rectangular stair hall. The quarter-turn stair rises in the northeast corner and is embellished with a circular tapered newel post and square balusters set on a diagonal to resemble a diamond shape. The stringer is decorated with scrollwork. Rising in steep upward sweeps before each landing post, the circular handrail is repeated on the adjacent wall surface with a half-rail. Door and window surrounds follow an early 19th-century profile of an ogee and astragal molded backband throughout the house. Likewise, the chair rail and baseboard follow the same profile in each room. Flat six-panel doors are accented by a small cavetto molding around each panel. The reveals of each doorway are paneled.

The southwest room or study contains a corner fireplace with a Federal period mantel. An ogee molded surround frames the hearth and supports fluted end blocks and a plain frieze. The shelf is stepped and detailed with various moldings.

Directly behind the study is the parlor which contains the most elaborate mantel as well as paneled wainscoting and cornice moldings. The chimney breast is highlighted by a richly detailed Federal period mantel. Semicircular reeded pilasters flank the hearth and are capped by a frieze molding enriched with an applied saw-tooth type molding. The frieze is also distinguished by paneled blocks and capped by a stepped and richly molded shelf. At the top, a reeded herringbone band stretches across to complete the design.

The fourth room or dining room is finished in much the same way with cornice molding, chair rail and baseboard. The mantel design is less complex than in the parlor. It follows the same format but is not embellished with as much detail. Under the cove cornice a beaded astragal molding highlights the otherwise standard design. To the right of the chimney breast is a built-in dining room closet with a replaced glazed door.

The second floor is divided in the same manner as the first floor with the addition of a small room behind the enclosed attic stair. This room is now used as a bathroom. Across the upstairs hall is the room above the study which contains a corner fireplace. The mantel design consists of a crossetted fireplace surround which oddly juts out at the level of the rail and juts back in before the header molding. The stepped shelf is molded and broken at each end. The rear two rooms contain fireplaces as well, but these are only distinguished by molded surrounds. In the northeast room, a mid 19th-century three-panel door opens into the adjacent addition.

The attic is unfinished with an exposed sawn common rafter roof system with half-dovetailed lapped collar beams. The collars are fastened with double-struck cut nails. The east end chimney pile has been fully stuccoed, but the west end still has its exposed supportive arch in addition to its original wooden centering.

The basement is divided into four rooms - each separated by a brick partition. Exposed and whitewashed floor joists have a combination of hewn or pit-sawn sides and hewn bottoms. Supportive brick arches are found under the chimney piles.

Around the house are three early 20th-century farm buildings as well as a frame water tower. Among these, apparently the oldest is a small frame smoke house with circular sawn studs and later six pane windows. It was moved around 1945 from behind the house to the adjacent barnyard. These outbuildings do not contribute to the significance of the resource.

Other aspects of this property include the site of an earlier Waters house closer to the shore line, along with the remnants of a corduroy (log) road that led to an oyster house at the water's edge. The significance of these elements is uncertain.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT:

This structure was built by the fourth generation descendent of the original owner, William Waters, from Northampton County, Virginia. Historically, members of the Waters family were prominent Quaker planters in Somerset County. Major William Waters, originally of Northampton County, Virginia, was granted 1280 acres on September 5, 1663, and "Waters' River" remained in family hands for the next five generations.

On September 5, 1663, Major William Waters received a 1280 acre patent for "Waters; River" on the north bank of the "Annamessex River" (sic). John, William and Richard Waters inherited parts of their father's estate. John Waters received a 700 acre tract which passed to his son, William Waters, after John's death in 1708. William Waters' wife, Rose Harmanson, was assessed for 352½ acres of "Waters' River" in 1783 since William had died two years before. Included on the property was a "brick wall dwelling house with three rooms below - unfinished, kitchens, barns and all in bad repair orchards indifferent other improvements midling."¹ Fifteen years later the house was further described as the property of William H. Waters:

"1 dwelling house built of brick 52 feet by 20 feet
one storey high 7 windows 5 feet long by 2 feet 8 inches
3 windows 4 feet by 2 feet 1 kitchen 20 feet by 16 feet
1 smoake house 12 feet square 1 milk house 12 feet by 10 feet 1 carriage house 12 feet by 12 feet by 8 feet the above houses are very old and out of repair."²

From this description it is evident that the 1783 and 1798 descriptions refer to an earlier brick house that was replaced in the first or second decade of the 19th century. This construction date is supported architecturally by the Federal period woodwork in addition to the double-struck cut nails found in the attic framing. William H. Waters' will was proved in 1834 and left to his son Thomas Littleton Waters, "my manor or plantation whereon I now live. . ."³

Waters' River remained in the family until a few years before the Civil War when the then 300 acres were sold at auction to John Curtis.⁴

The next notable family to own "Waters' River" was the Robertson family, who acquired the property in 1888 from Francis S. Lockerman.⁵ Various Robertsons, including Dr. Samuel H. Robertson, a local general practitioner, owned the farm from 1888 until 1943.⁶ The current owners bought the 312 acre farm in 1950.⁷
