Description

The Wilburn House is a single story, wood frame Greek Revival residence decorated with ornate Italianate cornice brackets. In its present configuration it displays an irregular plan, composed of a gable roof principal component with a rear or southern gable roof ell projecting from its eastern end and a gable roof wing which is set back from the northern or front elevation and which projects to the west. A gable roof ell addition projects to the south from the rear of the western wing, forming another partial ell on the back of the main house, and thus creates a corner on the back of the house in which has been built another adjoining gable roof addition. Two exterior end brick chimneys survive on the gable ends of the main house and another exterior end brick chimney finishes the end of the western gable wing. The entire roof is covered in composition shingle, the exterior is sheathed in weatherboard, and the continuous foundation is constructed of brick.

The northern or front elevation of the main portion of the house is five bays in length, with a central pedimented portico flanked by four four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows. The windows are decorated with elegant, molded decorative crowns designed in a drip molding pattern. The portico features a broad frieze both below the pediment and within the pediment, and both are ornamented with elaborate Italianate brackets. The tympanum of the pediment is finished with flush planks as is the house wall beneath the pediment. The portico box columns are decorated with elegantly molded capitals and simpler bases, and are spaced so that slightly more room is allowed for access to the entrance. The entrance is a single panelled door surrounded by two-pane half-sidelights and a seven-pane transom. A decorative drip molding identical to that around the windows adorns the entrance also. Attached pilasters of the same decorative configuration as the columns complete the entry.

The western wing is but two bays in length and relieved by a single door entrance and two-pane transom to the east, and a fixed six-pane wood window to the west. The same decorative scheme as seen on the main portion of the house is continued on this wing, including the drip moldings around the window and door and the cornice brackets beneath and behind the hipped roof porch. The columns are of the simpler, unornamented box variety.

The western elevation of the house is relieved only by a single window to the south of the chimney, beneath the porch on the front of the western wing, and a four-over-four double-hung wood sash window toward the southern end of the wing addition. The eastern elevation features a single six-over-six double-hung wood sash window to the south of the chimney and three grouped one-over-one wood awning windows in the center of the ell wall.

The southern elevation is composed of the projecting rear gable ell to the west, the adjoining gabled addition to the east, a short portion of the rear of the main building, and the gable end of the eastern ell. The western gable end is fenestrated with a pair of central four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows. The adjoining gable addition features two one-over-one double-hung wood sash windows. The rear portion of the main house is lighted with a pair of recent one-over-one wood awning windows, and the eastern gable features a new single-pane entrance door to the west (covered by a simple shed porch roof) and a one-over-one wood awning window to the east.

The interior retains much of its original decorative wood moldings and detail, as most of the alterations have been additive. Several improvement campaigns of uncertain date have resulted in additions to the house; however, virtually all of these are on the rear of the structure, the only exception being the porch on the front of the western wing. None of the additions are of the size or scale to be aesthetically intrusive.

The Wilburn house is in very good condition.

Significance

Criterion C, local significance

Though little history survives regarding either the original owners or builder, the local folklore recalls that this building originally sat on a plot of land which covered the entire block and was built by a Captain Wilburn. Goodspeed records a Lieutenant Winborn who emigrated from Alabama and fought on the side of the Confederacy before returning to White County to practice medicine, but it is not certain that he returned to Searcy.

The Wilburn House (Part E, Historic Context #3) remains the best post-Civil War residential example in Searcy of the Greek Revival which in Arkansas remained popular for new construction through the 1870's, prior to the arrival of the railroad and the new architectural fashions it brought from outside the state.
